Bishops Warn of Czech Religious Fight

Reject Laws That Infringe On Church Affairs Rule

Statement Issued Is Strongest Since Control Statutes Went into Effect

Prague, Dec. 4 (AP).—Czechoslovakia's Roman Catholic bishops solemnly warned the Communist government today they cannot submit to church control laws that destroy religious freedom in this country. They even went so far as to suggest the possibility of a religious "fight."

The Czech word the bishops used was "boj," which may be translated as fight, struggle or conflict.

In the strongest statement by the bishops since the new church control laws went into effect November 1—making all clergymen civil servants paid by the state—the Catholic prelates soberly declared that if a religious fight does break out as a result of attempts to enforce the church control laws by threats and violence, the government alone will be to blame.

Nine Million Members

If it comes to a fight—"and God prevent it"—the bishops said, "there are enough people in this country of the holy martyrs who are willing to sacrifice everything for the right of God and religious freedom."

The Catholic church has 9 million members in a Czech population of about 13 million.

In a 2200-word letter to the government, the bishops demanded fulfillment of Paragraph 17 of the constitution, which says that "everyone shall be free to carry out the acts in connection with any religious denomination."

They charged that "not in countries where the church is not recognized by the state has the freedom of the church been so restricted as in this country."

Objections Listed

The bishops listed five major objections to the church control laws:

1. That the state has taken control over religious instruction, provoking the danger that "heresies" could be introduced in the teaching.

2. That government insistence on approval of all church appointments is inadmissible because church law requires that the bishops retain this to keep "unfit" persons out of the priesthood.

3. That bishops must control the filling of vacancies.

4. That bishops must decide when a priest may go on vacation because "only a church superior can know when and for how long a clergyman may leave his position."

5. That the presence of government appointees in the church consistories (administrative offices) is intolerable and their withdrawal is demanded.

Woman, 65, Gets Stuck 60 Hours In Midget's Tub

Council Bluffs, Iowa., Dec. 4 (U.P.).—Mrs. Marie Turnquist, 65, who spent 60 hours stuck in the bathtub of a midget friend, conceded tonight that the whole thing was rather amusing.

"It's kind of funny—don't you think?" she said.

Mrs. Turnquist, described as rather "plump," was staying at the midget's home while the midget wintered in Florida. Wednesday night she decided to take a bath in the midget-sized tub.

Plainly, it was no fit.

She rubbed her hands raw trying to get free. Friends who knew she was staying at the midget's house became worried when there was no response to telephone calls and investigated.

The Vice President said he and his wife, the former Mrs. Carleton Hadley of St. Louis, Mo., will spend a day or two at his apartment at 2101 Connecticut ave. nw.

Then he has a speaking engagement at Boca Raton, Fla., Wednesday, before the American Coffee Association. They will return to Washington for his speech at the Gridiron Club Saturday.

Second part of the honeymoon, the beaming "Veep" reported, will be back in Sea Island, Ga. The newlyweds plan to stay there until after the Christmas holidays.

Although Mr. Truman is on a "working vacation" in Florida, Mr. Barkley said he had no plans to

Jordan Ready To Show Diary In U. S. Probe

Officials Reportedly Named in Ex-Major's Story on Uranium

By Glen Martz
(Copyright 1949, by United Press)

Former Army Air Force Major George Racey Jordan of New York said yesterday he is ready to show Congressional investigators a detailed personal diary to support his charges that the late Harry L. Hopkins and two anonymous State Department officials "gave Russia the A-bomb on a platter."

Friends of Hopkins, White House intimate and close friend of President Roosevelt, promptly branded the story "incredible."

(In Fairbanks, Alaska, Brig. Gen. Dale V. Gaffney, who was Jordan's superior officer during the war as commander of the Alaskan division of the Air Transport Command, said the reports were a complete surprise to him. Gaffney added that if Jordan had filed any official reports on the matter, they should have passed across his desk.)

Two congressional committees ordered immediate investigations, and the Air Force and Atomic Energy Commission offered their "full cooperation" in the inquiries.

Jordan thumbed through his diary with a United Press reporter yesterday, and asserted his willingness to present it along with his sworn testimony to congressional committees "or anyone else who wants to establish the truth of this matter."

It was learned that FBI agents had questioned the 51-year-old Jordan and examined his diary.

Jordan, now assistant to the president of the New York construction firm of American Pacific Industrial Corp., first aired his story on the Friday night program of radio commentator Fulton Lewis, jr. He said about 1650 pounds of raw uranium and literally tons of secret papers were sent to Russia in black suitcases over the wartime Alaskan Lend-Lease route.

His red, cloth-bound diary was crammed with dates and serial numbers of Air Force planes which, he said, flew a steady stream of atomic materials and State secrets to the Great Falls,

Malay Stabs British Ruler Of Sarawak

Governor Is Wounded Seriously; 2 Backers Of 'White Rajah' Held

Singapore, Dec. 4 (AP).—A Malay youth stabbed the British governor of Sarawak yesterday in the first outbreak of violence in that colony's anti-British movement. The commissioner general's office here said the governor's condition was serious.

Two rebels, about 16 years old, attacked Governor Duncan Stewart, 45, at Sibu, about 100 miles from Kuching, capital of the British crown colony on the island of Borneo. One of them drove a knife into Stewart's abdomen during a reception. The second missed with his thrust.

A government communique identified the two Malays as members of a band rebelling against the cession of Sarawak to Britain and demanding the return of the "white rajahs." Both were arrested. Stewart was flown here tonight for treatment. He was given blood transfusions aboard the plane.

Sarawak, with 500,000 inhabitants and 300,000 acres of rubber plantations, became a crown colony on July 1, 1946. It was ceded to the crown by its last white Rajah, 71-year-old Sir Charles Vyner Brooke. It had been ruled by the Brooke family since 1840.

Since the cession, Anthony Brooke, nephew of Sir Charles, has been trying to get the British government to let him enter Sarawak.

Robbery Dream $25 Nightmare To N.E. Resident

A nightmare, so vivid it sent Frank McQueeney, 41, of 1100 Abbey pl. ne., to police, cost him $25 yesterday.

Police said McQueeney on Saturday reported that two men invaded his apartment, knocked him to the floor and took jewelry valued at $960.

Yesterday, police said, McQueeney telephoned them that it was all a mistake; that he had dreamed he was robbed, and he had found the jewelry, which was misplaced. Police charged him with making a false report. He forfeited $25 collateral.

Radiation Victim Sees Again

Science Is Giving Sight Back To Man Blinded in Atom Job

Pittsburgh, Dec. 4 (AP).—A year ago atom rays made a scientist at the University of Pittsburgh go blind. Today science is giving him back his sight.

Dr. Alexander J. Allen, 48-year old professor in charge of the university's cyclotron, was injured and didn't know it. His vision was impaired by neutron radiation as he adjusted the cyclotron in the spring of 1948.

By April, 1949, he could distinguish little more than daylight and dark.

Last July he went to New York's Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center where Dr. Algernon Reese removed the lens of his right eye.

The atomic expert now wears spectacles with a thick right lens to replace the missing lens of his right eye. He said enthusiastically:

"It's getting better every day. I'm going to have a second operation to have my left eye corrected. I can't go now, though. I'm teaching again. I have a class in nucleonics now. I'll try to have the other operation this summer during vacation."

Dr. Allen's blindness gave science an important warning in atomic research. Now scientists know the eyes are the part of the body most sensitive to radiation.

"It happened while we were adjusting the cyclotron," Dr. Allen recalled. "The adjustments are a very tedious job. One quick look inside can save you hours of work. Now we leave it strictly alone while it's working."

'Best Armies' Reported Fleeing China

250,000 Men Under Gen. Pai May Be Moved to Island 10 Miles Off Coast

Hongkong, Dec. 4 (AP).—The best armies left to the Chinese Nationalists today were reported quitting the mainland for Hainan Island, off the South China coast.

These are the 250,000-man forces of Gen. Pai Chung-hsi in South China.

If the reports are true, only scattered Nationalist armies in China's far west, some broken and fleeing, will remain on the mainland to face the conquering Communists.

Gen. Pai himself has set up headquarters on Hainan, where Red guerillas abound.

News dispatches said most of his troops were concentrated on Luichow peninsula. This juts out from the coast to within about 10 miles of Hainan.

Some of Pai's troops were being left behind to set up bases in the mountains for guerilla warfare.

Chinese press reports said the Communists were only 50 miles from Nanning, the provisional capital of Pai's Kwangsi Province.

Most provincial officials already had pulled out for Hainan. Nanning's fall was expected within 48 hours. The city is only 80 miles from the border of Indo-China.

In far off Chengtu, the uneasy refugee Nationalist capital in western China, preparations again were being made for flight. A party of junior officials made a visit to Sichang, 225 miles southwest of Chengtu, to see about accommodations. Sichang is expected to be the next provisional capital.

A government Central News Agency dispatch from Chengtu said Premier Yen Hsi-shan had requested Acting President Li Tsung-jen in Hongkong to "seriously reconsider" his plan to visit the United States.

Li is scheduled to leave here by plane Monday for San Francisco en route to New York.

In reply to written questions from the Associated Press, Li said he was not giving up the presidency. He also indicated that any United States aid should be channelled through him.

Chiang Vows Finish Fight On Mainland of China

By Spencer Moosa

Chengtu, Dec. 4 (AP).—Chiang Kai-shek today said in an exclusive interview that the fight on the Chinese mainland will be continued at all costs and sacrifices.

(Chiang spoke at a time when his armies were in retreat in the west and were reported retiring from the mainland in South China to Hainan Island).

"We are now concentrating our troops so that the battle for the southwest can be sustained," he declared.

"Behind the iron curtain of Communist tyranny the Chinese people have taken up arms to fight against the oppressive rule of the Communists.

"They are fighting in the Yangtze Valley. They are fighting in Chekiang, in Honan, in Shantung, in Fukien and in Kwangtung (Red-occupied central and coastal provinces on the east and south).

"We are now helping to organize and supply these units behind enemy lines."

Chiang again is in active control of the Nationalist defenses after retiring from the presidency last

Truman Eases Monopoly Fight In Favor of Trade Education; O'Mahoney Opposes Tax Hike

Wyoming Senator Urges Levy Reform Instead of Higher Rates at This Time

By The Associated Press

Forecasting excellent business conditions in 1950, Senator O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) said yesterday that any tax increase not only would be a mistake but a "practical impossibility."

The Wyoming Senator, who heads the Senate-House Economic Committee, said he thinks the Government can get more revenue by revising the tax system to give new incentives to business than by raising rates.

President Truman has said he sees no other way to balance the budget except to raise taxes. However, Mr. Truman has not made clear the type of tax program he will submit in his January messages to Congress.

Would Eliminate "Waste"

If O'Mahoney's views were followed, the Senate-House Committee's economic report to Congress will urge elimination of wasteful spending but will point out the dangers and difficulties of too sharp cuts in the budget and will oppose tax rises.

"It is a practical impossibility to increase taxes now," the Wyoming Senator declared. "I think the need for additional revenue can be met from conscious and intelligent effort to promote our own resources and to create business."

O'Mahoney said committee studies indicate that general business prospects for 1950 are "excellent." He said that business and Government spending, running at high levels, are continuing to create new markets.

The committee chairman said he has no doubt that some wasteful spending can be eliminated by Congress. But he added that as an Appropriations Committee member he had found it easier to talk about budget cuts than to make them.

Sees Peril In Budget Cut

"Any attempt to balance the budget by cutting off Government expenditures for such things as highways and fighting stream pollution inevitably would reduce the opportunities for business and cast a wet blanket over the economy," he said.

"The only substantial way of reducing expenditures beyond what the President has attempted is by further curtailing necessary outlays to contain communism, to prepare for national defense, and to meet obligations arising from past wars."

He said national defense, international payments, veterans benefits and interest on the public debt now represent 75 percent of the budget whereas 10 years ago they accounted for only 30 percent. He said Congress has difficulty in paring these items.

Mt. Etna Still Erupting But Danger Subsides

Catania, Italy, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—Mount Etna, in eruption since Friday, still spewed tons of molten lava from one of its four new craters today, but officials said the volcano was subsiding with no danger to surrounding towns.

Stimulants Sought

Dearth of Private Investment Sets Off Congressional Inquiry

By The Associated Press

So many thrifty Americans are said to be refusing to risk their savings in business investments that Congress is looking for the reason.

Senator O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) announced yesterday the Senate-House Economic Committee will begin digging into the problem Tuesday in a series of public hearings.

He told a news conference there is a serious lack of venture capital for business in all the money markets—and the small businessman, in particular, is having a hard time borrowing.

People are putting their savings into Government securities, insurance, and in other savings, he said. But he added they are not taking chances on new business ventures or business expansion.

The committee will seek to find, O'Mahoney said, whether Congress should step in with legislation to encourage more direct investments in business.

A reporter asked if this meant the committee might recommend higher taxes on undistributed business profits.

O'Mahoney said he would not jump to conclusions before hearing the evidence. But he added that many business executives "are beginning to wonder if it would not be better for them to distribute more profits."

"In my mind one thing is certain," he said. "If we want to maintain the value of United States bonds, we've got to be sure income does not fall. And we've got to be doubly sure not to cut any Government operation which helps business."

The Economic Committee's first session will be a round-table discussion with the Department of Commerce Small Business Advisory Committee.

95-Cent Daily Hike Reported Lewis' Price

Royalty Boost to 35c Per Ton Also Being Studied in Kentucky

By The Associated Press

John L. Lewis apparently has tossed before a group of small Kentucky operators his price for peace in the coal industry.

It is reported by other mine owners to be:

1. A "fourth-round" wage increase of 95 cents a day—more than 12 cents an hour—to bring the miner's basic daily pay to an even $15.

2. A boost in the miners' welfare fund royalties of 15 cents a ton, to make it 35 cents. This would yield 175 million dollars a year on annual production of 500 million tons of soft coal.

Those are the provisions said to be under consideration by the Pike County Truck Owners Association, a group of 34 truck mine operators from Pikeville, Ky.

A three-man delegation is to meet with Lewis here this week. UMW headquarters declined comment, but at Pikeville both union and operator officials said no date for the session has been set. UMW board member Tom Raney said he is hopeful that an appointment with the mine workers' chieftain can be made "by next Thursday."

It has been more than six months since Lewis opened negotiations for an agreement last May 25.

This was the first sign of a break.

Jackson Statue, Gift of Truman, Unveiled Early

Independence, Mo., Dec. 4 (AP).—A statue of Andrew Jackson, President Truman's gift to his home town, has been unveiled unofficially—by fire.

The figure, mounted on a pedestal in front of the Independence courthouse, was concealed by a muslin covering, awaiting an official unveiling.

Somehow the muslin caught fire and burned Friday night. Police suspect youthful pranksters. The granite pedestal was blackened.

Officials aren't taking any chances. The statue won't be covered again.

Census Taker To Ask About Your Income

Law Orders New Question, but Data Will Stay Secret

The census taker next April 1 is going to ask every fifth American of 14 years or older how much he made in 1949—the same sort of questions you answer in your Federal income tax return.

The idea is to provide the most detailed statistical study yet of how much Americans make—wages, salaries, business and professional incomes, farm payments, interest, dividends, pensions and rents.

The factory worker must tell how much he was paid, the doctor and lawyer what his fees came to, the retired person how he got his income, the businessman his profits.

By law the figures will be kept secret from everybody but the machines which will add them up and turn them into statistical tables. Neither the Bureau of Internal Revenue nor the FBI will be permitted to look at any family's information.

If an individual refuses to tell the census taker how much he made in 1949 he can be arrested, tried, and if convicted, fined up to $100 or jailed for 60 days, or both. If he wilfully gives false answers, the penalty goes up to $500 fine or a year in jail, or both.

Every household in the land will be asked names, ages and so on of everybody in the family. Every fifth person will be asked about income, weeks worked, veteran status and other matters, and every thirtieth person about occupation, marital status and previous marriages.

Census questions about personal income were not asked in any of the decennial head countings until 1940. Then householders were queried on how much wages and salary they received in 1939. They also were asked if they received $50 or more "from sources other than money, wages or salary."

These limited questions brought forth a protest from Senator Tobey (R., N. H.). Secretary of Commerce Harry Hopkins, and later President Roosevelt retorted that the protest was pure politics.

The Census Bureau, part of the Commerce Department, bowed to President Scraps 'Crackdown' for 'Positive' Approach To Curbing Trusts

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

President Truman has told Commerce Secretary Charles Sawyer to adopt a "positive" rather than a "crackdown" approach to prevention of monopoly and restraint of trade.

Under the President's orders, Sawyer is to set up an inter-agency committee composed of the Federal organizations concerned with the monopoly and antitrust problem. This committee is to make recommendations for improvements in programs, administrative arrangements and any needed changes in the law.

In a letter to Sawyer, the President indicated that present law enforcement methods to prevent monopolistic activities "could well be supplemented by an educational and promotional program."

Expanding the idea, Sawyer said in a statement:

"Heretofore, Government efforts in this field have been confined primarily to prosecuting those alleged to be guilty or proceeding against those suspected of unfair trade practices. This is the first time the matter has been approached from a positive standpoint.

To Aid Businessmen

"The program to be presented to the President for his consideration will be designed to encourage legal and desirable practices, to discourage and bring about voluntary abandonment of illegal or questionable practices, and to clarify for the businessman the line between what he can and cannot do legally.

"It is my observation . . . that while most businessmen want to obey the law and try conscientiously to do so, there is much unnecessary confusion at present as to what the law prohibits and what it permits."

Sawyer was not clear as to what precisely any educational campaign would consist of, nor how one would go about persuading business voluntarily to halt violations of the antitrust laws.

Nor was it clear how such an approach would meet the principal problem of monopoly now facing the Nation, the concentration in a few companies of huge proportions of the business of an industry.

Figures Released

Sawyer did, however, make public the most indicative set of figures yet issued that outline the nature of the problem.

He sent to Representative Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), chairman of a judiciary subcommittee studying monopoly power, a tabulation made from data from the 1947 Census of Manufacturers. It showed for all but one of the 453 classifications

William Benton Lets Word Out . . . He's New Senator

Hartford, Conn., Dec. 4 (AP).—William Benton revealed today he is to be Connecticut's new United States Senator.

Benton said he plans to leave for Washington shortly after Christmas to set up his office and to find a place to live.

Official announcement of Benton's appointment is slated to come Monday at a press conference called by Gov. Chester Bowles.

Benton is to succeed United States Senator Raymond E. Baldwin on December 17, and his term will extend through the November, 1950, State election. Baldwin has resigned to accept appointment as a Connecticut Supreme Court Justice.

The 50-year-old Benton served two years as Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs. He was one of the originators of the "Voice of America."

He has described himself as an independent voter who is not registered with any political party.

First Woman to Hold Post

Vivian Simpson to Take Oath As Md. State Secretary Dec. 15

Miss Vivian V. Simpson, Rockville attorney, will be sworn as Maryland's first woman Secretary of State December 15 at 4 p. m., Gov. W. Preston Lane, jr., announced yesterday.

The announcement confirms an exclusive story printed in The Washington Post October 24 saying that Governor Lane would appoint Miss Simpson to succeed Bertram L. Boone 2d, as Secretary of State. Boone has resigned, effective December 15, to accept a Federal post.

Miss Simpson, a native of Washington, resides at 241 Park ave., Takoma Park, Md.

Miss Simpson was elected the first woman president of the Montgomery County Bar Association in September after serving two terms a vice president. She is the only woman member of the association.

For seven years, Miss Simpson served as a member of the State Industrial Accident Compensation Board, of which she was first woman member, resigning in November, 1947, to devote full time to her law practice with the firm of Simpson & Simpson of which her brother, former State's Attorney Joseph B. Simpson, jr., is the other member.

Miss Simpson now is serving as vice chairman of the commission to study and rewrite the workmen's compensation law. A report is expected to be presented to the 1951 session of the General Assembly. She also is a member of the Maryland Traffic Safety Committee.

Miss Simpson, 46, was graduated from George Washington University and received her law degree "with distinction" in 1927, and in April, 1928, was admitted to the Bar of the Maryland Court of Appeals. Because of her standing in law school, she was admitted to the District of Columbia Bar without examination and without waiting the customary five-year period for entrance without examination.

The firm of Simpson & Simpson was counsel to the Montgomery County Commissioners from 1938 to 1940 and both Miss Simpson and her brother have had a prominent part in Democratic political campaigns in the county and the State.

FTC Gets 'Consent' Offer

Steel Price-Fixing Charges May End in Compromise Plan

By The Associated Press

A compromise settlement was being considered yesterday to end Government price-fixing conspiracy charges against nearly 100 of the Nation's steel companies.

The Federal Trade Commission announced it has received an offer from the American Iron and Steel Institute and members to accept an order against methods of pricing steel products.

The proposal is "designed to terminate," FTC said, a two-year-old Federal complaint that the steelmakers engaged in an unlawful conspiracy to fix prices and destroy competition in the sale of steel.

The Government's complaint, issued in August, 1947, centered around the steel companies' so-called "delivered price system"—that is, their methods of adding freight charges to the price of steel.

A statement from the agency made it clear that the Government has not yet made up its mind to accept the proposed "consent order" compromise.

Lynn C. Paulson, FTC attorney in charge of the case, recommended commission acceptance of the steel companies' offer.

This was met with a strong objection from Richard P. Whitney, the agency's director of litigation and chief trial counsel, who said FTC has no authority to settle the case at this point, and that the U.S. Picks 5 for U.N. Peacemakers' Panel

In U. N. Today

Jerusalem Compromise Plan Is Due

Lake Success, N. Y., Dec. 4 (U.P.).—A new compromise formula on the future of Jerusalem will be put forward Monday as the United Nations General Assembly enters the final week of its session.

The new plan, chiefly the work of the Dutch and Swedish delegations, will be a composite crystallization of Swedish and Dutch subcommittee plans for appointment of a U. N. high commissioner to protect the holy places and supervise demilitarization.

Arrayed against it will be the subcommittee's majority recommendation for strict international control of Jerusalem. The measure is strongly opposed by Israel and Jordan.

The consensus among U. N. observers is that there is little chance of mustering two-thirds support for strict internationalization.

The main political committee is scheduled to reach its delayed vote on the Chinese case. It is considered probable that the Nationalists will withdraw their own proposal for condemnation of Soviet aid to the Communists and seek to salvage something from their case through a series of amendments to the American-designed proposal for a U. N. "hands-off" policy on China.

The full Assembly will meet at Flushing Meadows for final action on a census of conventional—or non-atomic—arms and armed forces.

Oath to Keep Jerusalem Taken by 12,000 Jews

Jerusalem, Dec. 4 (AP).—A procession of Jews a mile and a half long marched today to Mount Herzl and took an oath to keep Jerusalem for Israel.

Chief Rabbi Isaac Halevy Herzog of the Holy City said:

"We herewith undertake to stand as a solid and fortified wall against all attempts to separate Jerusalem from Israel."

Beaverbrook Urges British to Quit U. N.

London, Dec. 4 (AP).—Lord Beaverbrook's empire-minded Sunday Express accused the United Nations today of "making its first move to pluck the British Empire to pieces," and urged Britain to withdraw from the U. N.

The United Nations Assembly Friday beat down British opposition and adopted 10 measures designed to throw more light on the world's non-self-governing peoples.

The Sunday Express said the U. N. had voted to install itself "as a super-government in our colonial possessions."

Lake Success, Dec. 4 (AP).—The United States delegation nominated five men tonight to a new United Nations peacemakers' panel.

They are roving Ambassador Philip C. Jessup, Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, Publisher Mark F. Ethridge, jr., Senator Frank P. Graham (D., N. C.), and H. Merle Cochran, a State Department Ambassador.

They are name to the new "panel for inquiry and conciliation" authorized by the U. N. last April, and will serve five-year terms.

Each member nation was invited to designate from one to five persons "who by reason of their training, experience and understanding are deemed to be well fitted to serve as members of commissions of inquiry or conciliation."

U. S. First to Act

Warren R. Austin, head of the U. S. delegation, transmitted the names in a letter to U. N. Secretary-General Trygve Lie. The United States was the first nation to name its representatives to the panel.

Austin said "developing methods for peaceful settlement of international disputes is one of the most important tasks of our time."

Panel members will be available for appointment to inquiry boards set up by the Security Council, the Assembly, other organs of the United Nations, or at the request of any group of states trying to arbitrate disputes.

Jessup is the State Department's Far East expert and is credited with initiating the talks that led to a settlement of the East-West dispute over Berlin.

Bunche worked out the Israel-Arab armistices in Palestine after he was thrust to the fore by the assassination of Count Folke Bernadotte, whom he had been assisting.

Ethridge is publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal and since the war has surveyed Balkan problems for the United States, was a United States appointee to the U. N. Security Council, was chairman of the United States advisory committee on information, and was United States representative on the Palestine conciliation commission until last July.

Senator Graham resigned as president of the University of North Carolina last March to accept appointment to the Senate. He was active on the U. N. conciliation commission that got peace between the Netherlands and her Indonesian colonies.

Cochran, a native of Crawfordsville, Ind., is a long-time career man in the State Department. His work on the U. N. Indonesian conciliation commission capped years of Government service.

Chiang Vows Fight to End

January. He soon may resume the presidency.

Chiang receives this correspondent at the commandant's residence in the Central Military Academy. It was the first interview he had granted to a foreign correspondent in five months. His remarks were in the form of a written statement in reply to a series of questions.

The generalissimo said he had gone to Chungking at a time when the Reds threatened the city. He had gone at the instance of acting president Li Tsung-jen, he added.

Li is in Hongkong and this week will go to the United States, ostensibly for medical treatment. He has broken politically with Chiang.

"I expected acting President Li to return to Chungking to help cope with the critical situation confronting us," Chiang said. "However, he decided to leave the country."

"As a Chinese patriot and leader of the Chinese revolution, it (defense leadership) is my responsibility—and I shall not shirk it."

The generalissimo conceded the fall of Chungking created a difficult situation for the Nationalists in southwest China.

Quiz Children Oppose Shift of Capital

By Lee Grove
Post Reporter

Moving the seat of national Government from the banks of the Potomac might be a good defense measure, but it arouses no enthusiasm among five of Washington's brightest youngsters.

That came out yesterday afternoon when the homegrown young intellectuals appeared on the National Broadcasting Co.'s national Quiz Kids program at Wardman Park Hotel.

Quizmaster Joe Kelly said a Colorado Lady "thinks maybe it would be a good idea to move the Capital of the United States to a centrally located spot in our country . . . What do you think?"

Said Berk Sugar, 13 of 2800 Ontario rd. nw., a Central High School student: "In the center of the country it would be much more difficult to attack, but I am not in favor of moving it."

Said Barbara Cohen, 14 of 900 G st. sw., a Stuart Junior High School student, "I think it is a mark of distinction that the Capital is not in any State.

Carl Goeffrey Simon, 11, of 907 Maryland ave. ne., Edmonds School: "I don't want to see the Capital being moved, but it couldn't be captured as easily."

Leland Collins, 11, of 442 M st. nw., Bundy School: "I think it should stay where it is."

William Michael Briggs, jr., 6 of 200 Connecticut ave., John Quincy Adams School: "You couldn't move it unless you took it all apart."

The Quiz Kids answered such questions as why cowboys dress the way they do ("The chaps protect them against brush and thorns," said Mike, who sang "Goodbye, Old Paint, I'm Aleavin' Cheyenne," for the audience); in what opera is King Mark a character ("Tristan and Isolde," said Barbara), and who won the Second Punic War (Rome beat Carthage, Leland said).

Barbara and Michael were the winners, it was announced at the conclusion of the WRC-NBC broadcast, on which Assistant Attorney General Alex Campbell spoke briefly. The Quiz Kids, selected from among public school students in auditions, were judged on a point system that made allowances for varying ages.

Next Sunday Barbara and Michael, in the second of the two Washington broadcasts, will compete with Martha Smith, 10, of 1331 Kenyon st. nw., B. K. Bruce School, Margaret G. Bursick, 14, of McLean, Va., student at Gordon Junior High School, and Teddy Collins, 12, of 5104 Fulton st., Francis Scott Key School.

Yugo Spy-Ring Figure Gives Firm Denial

Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, Dec. 4 (AP).—An undersized, hard-as-rocks prisoner in Sarajevo's alleged spy ring voiced defiant denials today in a desperate struggle for his freedom and perhaps his life.

Arson Boremovic, Russian-born attorney who fled to Yugoslavia from the Bolsheviks in 1920, was the sixth defendant to walk before the district tribunal. He is one of 10 White Russians indicted for wartime cooperation with the Germans and for spying for the Soviet Union after the country's liberation.

Right at the outset, the white-haired president of the tribunal asked Boremovic: "Do you plead guilty to anything?"

Boremovic retorted: "To nothing."

Barely 5 feet tall and weighing little more than 100 pounds, Boremovic stood at attention before the three-man court and used his legal training in Russia and Yugoslavia in an effort to parry thrusts both from the bench and the prosecution.

Specifically he is charged with:

1. Serving as a prosecutor during the war in two courts-martial which resulted in death sentences for more than 20 persons who resisted the Germans and their puppet Ustachi government.

2. Working with Soviet intelligence in 1947, furnishing it with reports on conditions in this part of Yugoslavia and later supplying information to the Cominform

Rent Curbs to End, Sparkman Believes

Senator John J. Sparkman (D., Ala.) chief Senate architect of the present rent control law, said yesterday he doesn't think Congress will continue rent ceilings beyond next June 30.

He made the statement in a telegram from his Huntsville, Ala., home when informed Rent Director Tighe E. Woods had disclosed he will ask Congress for another year of controls.

Sparkman, who heads the Senate Banking Subcommittee on Housing and Rents, said he has had no chance to examine the latest facts on the rent situation. And he said that "undoubtedly" many areas will continue "for a long time to have difficult housing situations making rent control desirable and almost necessary."

But he commented that such areas will become less numerous as time goes on, and pointed out that Congress, in the current rent law, "tried to put States and municipalities on notice in order that they might take whatever action" was needed to provide local rent controls.

"Without benefit of the latest data but viewing the situation purely from a practical standpoint, I cannot believe, in the absence of a presently unforeseen national emergency, that Congress will consent to further extension of control," he said.

President Truman is expected to back up Woods' plea when the present law expires June 30.

Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.) who heretofore has backed rent controls, told a reporter he did not know whether he could support another extension.

"Indications are that it (rent control) is unnecessary in most areas," he said. Wisconsin has set up its own rent control program in place of Federal controls.

Sparkman did not state flatly he would personally oppose a control extension. But he emphasized he has felt since last year that the need for ceilings was steadily decreasing.

5 Killed, 8 Injured As Berlin Walls Fall

Berlin, Dec. 4 (U.P.). — Toppling walls from bomb-shattered buildings here killed at least five persons and injured eight others here today as a heavy windstorm pounded Western Europe and halted most shipping.

Three other persons were believe killed in airplane crashes.

A small plane crashed near Etampes, France, killing the French pilot and his single passenger. An RAF Spitfire, which normally carries one man, plunged into the North Sea during a training flight.

QUESTIONNAIRE—Every fifth person in the Nation 14 years and older will answer questions shown above on actual enumerator's sheet to be carried from door to door in census next year. In 1940, for the first time, information in Column 31a—on wages and salaries—was sought. Now questions in Columns 31b and 31c have been added the criticism to the extent of permitting individuals asked about their income to write the answer on a blank and mail it in, rather than give it verbally to the census taker. Out of around 38 million families, some 190,000 did that.

Census to Query Everybody About Income

Tobey charged the census takers were political appointees, which they traditionally are. This time 140,000 enumerators will be hired for about two weeks' work. They are paid on a piecework basis and are expected to average about $8 a day.

They will be selected by the 450 district supervisors, each of whom has a slice of the United States as his territory. The supervisors will be glad to receive "recommendations" from Congressmen and others for the jobs, Census says. Of the 450 supervisory jobs, 300 already are filled by permanent census workers. The other 150 hands still are to be hired.

Census expects a majority of the 140,000 enumerators to be women, housewives mostly. Since they go from door to door during the daytime hours, it is estimated that 95 per cent of the answers about a family will be given by women.

Census has its fingers crossed, however, when asked whether the agency believes the average housewife knows how much her husband really made.

The Census Bureau has the authority to determine the questions to be asked. It receives thousands of suggestions, most of which are turned down, even though they have some merit. For example, among the rejected ideas were questions covering ability to speak foreign languages, belief in God, religious affiliation, union membership, private garages, life insurance, household pets and washing machines.

FAO Studies Move to Rome, Food Surplus

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) spent yesterday awaiting action on two important questions:

1. How it is going to finance moving from Washington to Rome, which it voted to do last week.

2. What it is going to do about food surpluses in some countries and near-famine in others, after having killed off Director General Norris E. Dodd's proposed International Commodity Clearing House.

Recommendations on both questions will be presented to the FAO plenary session today and Tuesday. Delegates hope to wind up affairs and get away by Thursday at the latest.

The working party of Commission One, that was given the ICCH proposal, has prepared a strongly disapproving report.

Instead of the elaborate machinery that would have been set up under ICCH, the committee recommended that an "FAO Committee on Commodity Problems" be set up.

"This committee would be advisory," the report suggests, "and would address its attention primarily to the food and agricultural surplus commodity situation."

The committee would study the advantages to be gained by multilateral agreements, such as the International Wheat Agreement of last year.

The group studying the problem posed by the vote to move to Rome has not yet decided upon its recommendations. However, last night it was reported that it was ready to recommend that the actual move be put off until the next conference, which will be at least a year. Housing difficulties in Rome, added to the lack of funds with which to finance the move, dictated that decision, members reported.

An important addition to the FAO was announced Saturday as in prospect. Sweden has applied for membership, and may be voted in this week. Officials have had the latchstring out for Sweden since FAO was founded.

Long Debate Heard

Saturday's session of Commission One was marked by lengthy debate on a controversial resolution offered by the Irish delegate, James M. Dillon. Dillon's resolution, which many delegates thought outside the scope of FAO, read:

"That the director-general inform the Governments of the United States and Great Britain that FAO finds that almost every food production and distribution problem is complicated by inconvertibility of sterling and dollars, and request these governments to indicate if and when these governments intend by suitable action to establish sterling and dollar convertibility."

With 45 delegates not voting, Dillon's resolution was defeated 10 to 4.

settlement now "would be contrary to the public interest."

Paulson expressed the view that the FTC order proposed under the compromise would permanently bar the firms from using the so-called "basing point delivered price system." He went on to assert his belief that dropping of such basing point methods would provide "appropriate relief" in the public interest.

Paulson observed that under the basing point plan, "refusal to sell f. o. b. mill prevented the transportation of steel by other means than rail in addition to the fact that it lessened competition."

Steel Price Increase Predicted by Moreell

Pittsburgh, Dec. 4 (AP). — The head of the Nation's fourth largest steel-producing firm today indicated steel prices are going up.

Admiral Ben Moreell, chairman of the board and president of Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., said in a statement:

"It becomes crystal clear that the increased costs for raw materials, for services and for labor which are now being imposed on us, must be balanced by corresponding increases in prices."

3 Billions Spent By Europe in ERP

Paris, Dec. 4 (AP).—Europe has spent nearly three billion dollars of its own money under the Marshall Plan, a United States Government survey showed today.

For every dollar granted by the European Cooperation Administration, the Marshall Plan countries put a dollar's worth of their own currency into "counterpart funds."

This is required by the separate agreement each signs with the American Government. The money comes from ordinary government funds, raised by taxation and bonds, and from the proceeds of the sale of Marshall Plan goods to European citizens.

The ECA must approve withdrawals from these funds, and does so only when it considers the money is going to a worthy recovery purpose.

The United States has appropriated about nine billion dollars for the Marshall Plan, but not all of this has been used up to now. Also, not all the money in counterpart funds can be spent yet. The equivalent of $3,030,000,000 has been approved for withdrawal, while $2,796,500,000 has been put to use.

More than half this sum has gone to stimulate industrial production. Britain and Norway, however, preferred to use their counterpart funds to retire national debt.

The French program financed with Marshall Plan francs includes investments in the steel industry and improvements in the coal mines and electric power system.

Nurse Howe Kept Cool, Oven Hot!

The Washington Post
MISS MURIEL HOWE
. . . Back from China

By Martha J. Hall
Post Reporter

What would you do if 40 armed men swarmed through your house ransacking bureaus and tables and staring at their contents?

Muriel Howe, diminutive Seventh-Day Adventist missionary nurse who found herself in that situation in Communist-dominated Yunan Province of China, just went right on with her baking.

The invading Communist soldiers found the oven particularly fascinating and kept peering in to see what was happening to the browning bread.

Didn't Feel Brave

"I wasn't feeling very brave," Miss Howe said yesterday, "but I couldn't show it. And I was irked that I couldn't tell them to get out," she declared.

Australian-born Miss Howe is at Seventh-Day Adventist world headquarters in Takoma Park, Md., on furlough from her missionary work in China this year. But she plans to return to China as soon as she can get back in.

Her adventure with the Chinese Communists happened when she made a 10-day journey by foot into the interior to help bring out a sick missionary caught behind the rapidly advancing Communists.

After several hours the soldiers left the missionary compound, leaving unharmed Miss Howe, the sick woman and an eight-year-old girl, the only people there at the time.

From what she has seen, Miss Howe said that Communism in China seems to appeal particularly to the younger generation. On the trip out from Mokaing she saw hundreds of students marching south to join the Communist army.

What's the Solution?

The solution to China's problem? Miss Howe doesn't know the answer.

"China," she said, "is sick and tired of war. The people haven't had a day's peace since before 1937 and they are willing to try anything. They figure it can't be worse than what they have had."

Miss Howe first went to China in 1934. After receiving her nursing training she became supervisor of a hospital near the Tibetan border. In 1940 she returned to her home in Australia because of illness.

She returned to China in 1945 as the first Seventh-Day Adventist missionary to enter the country after the end of the war and became director of a 106-bed hospital and nursing school in Chungking.

Andrews Heads State Hoover Report Group

T. Coleman Andrews of Richmond, Va., yesterday was named chairman of the Virginia Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report.

The appointment was announced by Dr. Robert L. Johnson, national chairman of the national committee and president of Temple University. Andrews was chairman of the Hoover Commission task force on Federal Government accounting. And is vice president of the American Institute of accountants.

Krug's Resignation Laid to Cabinet Rift

By Carl Levin
NYHT News Service

A deep-rooted policy feud with Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan and differences over the allocation of budget dollars with the Administration were the principal causes of Julius A. Krug's abrupt resignation last month as Secretary of Interior.

The full story of the resignation, still officially unexplained, was obtained yesterday from one of the former Secretary's closest friends.

The friend, who insists on remaining anonymous so long as "Cap" Krug himself refuses to discuss the matter publicly, revealed that Krug, worn out from more than three years of fighting within the Administration, had arranged to resign in December, but this departure was speeded by "leaks" of his impending resignation.

Krug, according to his friend, attributes these leaks to persons in the White House who could not await his orderly departure.

Krug viewed himself as fighting a losing battle to make "America stronger at home." He tried in vain to convince other Cabinet officers, such as Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson or Secretary Brannan, that some of their programs should be dropped so budget dollars would be available to develop the natural resources of the West as an investment in future national security and economic well-being.

"Where his plans for the West came in conflict with Marshall Plans or Brannan plans, or some other damned plans," his friend related, "he always was as obstinate as he knew how in support of a program for making America strong at home."

By this, it was explained, he meant the development of Western water resources for power, reclamation of vast non-arid lands, the building of highways and the opening of the West to industry and agriculture.

Fight With Agriculture

In endeavoring to push these projects, Krug's friend said, he was in constant disagreement with other members of the Cabinet.

Krug was particularly unhappy about the continuing fight he had to wage with the Agriculture Department's "way of thinking." This fight, his friend related, became intensified in May, 1948, when Brannan succeeded Senator Clinton P. Anderson (D., N. Mex.) as Secretary.

Krug viewed this fight as one involving the basic question as to whether vast new lands were to be reclaimed, or whether farm interests were to be permitted to maintain the "status quo" so that new agricultural areas would not compete with them.

His public life was not made easier, Krug felt, when, after President Truman's election in November, 1948, some men with the Democratic National Committee unjustifiedly passed the word around that he had not worked for the President's election and was slated to go.

White House "Leak' Denied

Krug's friends feel these rumors were motivated by the single purpose of clearing the way for Oscar L. Chapman's elevation to the Cabinet from Undersecretary to Secretary of Interior. Chapman, sworn in as Secretary Thursday, is a longtime friend of Secretary Brannan. Both are from Denver.

Krug now is at Sea Island, Ga., where he is resting and still refusing to explain his resignation. After a month or two of rest, he probably will open an office here as an industrial consultant.

In Key West, Fla., where President Truman is vacationing, his press secretary, Charles G. Ross, flatly denied yesterday that there was any "leak" from the White House which speeded Krug's resignation. He would not comment on other phases of the account of the circumstances which prompted the resignation.

Secretary Brannan, reached here, would not comment.

Neither Krug's friends nor Brannan would comment in detail on reports that some blistering letters went from Brannan and President Truman to Krug shortly before he resigned. Asked about this, Krug's friend commented: "None that was any more critical than others he had received."

Chelf Seeks Federal Penalty For Sex Attacks on Children

Horrified by "ever-increasing" sex crimes against children, Representative Chelf (D., Ky.) yesterday announced he would try to make it a Federal offense to molest a child sexually.

Chelf would turn the FBI loose on offenders and set the penalties in a stiff range of 10 years to death.

Chelf, a member of the House Judiciary Committee, said he believed such a statute would be as effective in curbing degenerates who prey on children as the Lindbergh antikidnap law has been in controlling kidnaping.

The Congressman said it may be necessary to amend the Constitution before such a law can be enacted, and that he would propose such an amendment if that is needed.

He wants penalties of 10 to 20 years in cases where an attacked child survives, and penalties of death or life imprisonment, as directed by the jury, if the child is slain. He would bar the defense of insanity to persons accused of attacks on children, but allow mental treatment of those convicted and sent to prison.

"Apparently," Chelf said, "the State laws are insufficient to cope with this great menace to our society."

Monroney Wooing Sen. Thomas' Voters

Oklahoma's 74-year-old Senator Elmer Thomas, who recently complained about his reception in Sweden, may find something lacking in Oklahoma hospitality when he comes home.

For while Thomas is touring Europe, his Oklahoma neighbors are getting acquainted with a new type of campaigner.

In fact, 46-year-old Representative Mike Monroney, the Collier's Award winner who helped modernize Congress a few years ago, is shaking hands with Thomas' votes.

Monroney has neither good nor ill to say about Thomas' Swedish crack. He just doesn't mention it. He talks about his own ideas of foreign aid, aid to farmers, good government and last, but not least, congressional reforms.

Ever since Congress adjourned, Monroney has been stumping Oklahoma as methodically as if he already were running against Thomas. Before Congress reconvenes he will have visited all 77 counties.

Monroney calls it "pulse-feeling," but friends say he is getting ready to announce definitely against Thomas shortly after the first of the year.

When he does you can look for a gloves-off campaign that will keep the veteran Thomas on his toes. Colleagues of both already are running for cover.

Senator Robert S. Kerr (D., Okla.) summed up how they feel when he introduced Monroney at a banquet in Oklahoma City the other night.

Said Kerr: "Oklahoma's got a great senior Senator, and she's got the greatest Congressman in the United States, but it looks to me I've got to go fishing next summer to keep from getting into a complicated situation."

Thomas isn't the only "senior" Senator on the hot seat. A new class of House aspirants for Senate honors, rivaling any in recent years, has been taking quiet soundings.

Here are a few who have either announced or are flirting with the idea:

Representatives Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Calif.) and Richard M. Nixon (R., Calif.) against Senator Sheridan Downey (D., Calif.).

Representative John A. Carroll (D., Colo.) against Senator Eugene D. Millikin (R., Colo.).

Representative George A Smathers (D., Fla.) against Senator Claude Pepper (D., Fla.).

Representative Andrew J. Biemiller (D., Wis.) against Senator Alexander Wiley (R., Wis.).

Some House candidates for promotion are looking three full years ahead. Representative Mike Mansfield (D., Mont.) for example will almost certainly oppose Senator Zales N. Ekton (R., Mont.) in 1952.

Unlike most of the others, Monroney is conducting a systematic preliminary campaign. In Thomas he has perhaps picked the toughest opponent of the lot. He has been in politics ever since Oklahoma attained Statehood in 1902, going first to the State Senate, then to the House in 1922, and finally to the Senate in 1926.

Thomas is chairman of the potent Senate Agriculture Committee, which swings some weight with Oklahoma farmers, and in addition has a key spot on the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Monroney has been a member of the House for just 11 years, never ran for office outside his own Oklahoma district. But in his comparatively short period of service he coauthored sweeping reforms in Congress that won him national recognition. In 1945 he received the Collier's Award for Distinguished Congressional Service. His present job is to get equally acquainted with the Oklahoma farm vote, which Thomas has corraled for years.

Crack in the Curtain

Red Soldiers Told U. S. Intends Attack on Russia

Merle Fainsod, Harvard professor, recently spent 12 weeks in Germany and Austria talking in Russian with Soviet citizens who have fled Russia or who refuse to return home. The series is based on his interrogations. Names are fictitious for obvious reasons of personal safety. (This article is the second in the series.)

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

Four times a week, precisely at 7:30 a. m., Soviet occupation troops in Germany sit down to a political lecture—the role of the Red Army in history, the story of the Communist Party in Russia, the problem of capitalist encirclement of the Soviet Union.

Twice a week there are lengthy discussion periods. Recent deserters say that the smart Red Army soldier knows just enough pat answers to get by but, like the GI in any man's army, doesn't volunteer any information.

"A few of the soldiers, the activists, take it seriously," one deserter reported. "Maybe there are 10 percent of them. The others reply, 'I don't know' or give a stock answer. It is dangerous to be openly indifferent, since the MGB (secret police) has its network of spies in each company who report any anti-Soviet remark or attitude or anything that could be interpreted as anti-Soviet.

Warned Against U. S.

"Some of these agents are young Communists (Komsomols), others are soldiers who have been caught in some minor violation of regulations and who were promised freedom from punishment in exchange for serving as MGB agents."

In recent months the Soviet troops have been shown the film "Behind the Elbe" designed to deflate their ideas of the American part in the conquest of Germany. A political instructor at the same time tells the troops that while the Americans formerly were allies they are now preparing to attack the Soviet Union and constant vigilance must be maintained against them.

The effect of such propaganda? Here is what some recent Red Army deserters report:

"It had no effect on me and I don't think it did on many of my comrades. We saw Americans along the highway to Berlin and liked them though we had little chance to do more than look at each other. Most of us welcomed the propaganda period as an opportunity to rest or even to sleep a bit.

Propaganda Stepped Up

"The propaganda against the Americans is powerful and has been increased recently. We were told the American Government is dominated by Wall Street imperialists and fascists and that they would treat the Russian people even worse than Hitler had treated us if they should win. We were told to have no relations with the Americans. I think this has been effective among new recruits but soldiers who have served a long time in Germany and seen the Americans refused to take it seriously. They wouldn't say so openly but a stray remark among friends tells much."

"We hated the Germans not only because of the war but because of their occasional attacks on our border guards. But we felt different about the American soldiers. The stray contacts at the frontier almost always were friendly. The soldiers in my unit regarded the American soldiers as comrades and good fellows. Most of us refused to take the political lectures seriously. We could sleep with our eyes open, you know."

Food Not Plentiful

Food, the deserters agree, is better among the Soviet troops in Germany than at home. "But I don't think it is as good as in your American Army," said one soldier. He then gave these menus as typical:

Breakfast: About half a loaf (American size) of bread, soup, potatoes or kasha (a buckwheat or millet mush), tea and a pinch of sugar.

Dinner: Three fifths of a loaf of bread, borsch or soup, kasha or potatoes, about a tenth of a pound of meat.

Supper: Slightly less than half a loaf of bread, soup or potatoes, tea, a pinch of sugar.

A Soviet private makes about 40 Russian zone marks a month—enough to buy stamps, tooth paste and a few other sundries. Except when assigned to duty he is confined to barracks and absence of more than two hours is considered desertion, punishable by 15 to 20 years of forced labor, the deserters report.

Rule Violations Condoned

"Despite this," one said, "many soldiers manage somehow to get out of camp and establish relations with German girls. Those in a position to give permission never gave it. But they also usually failed to report offenses. After all, the soldiers knew some officers maintained establishments for their German women."

Another deserter reported that in his unit of 100 men, five in the past year had been sent home after meetings with German girls and five others were arrested for leaving the barracks without permission.

One soldier who went home from Germany to visit his mother on a collective farm got a surprise. He had read in the papers that his collective (kolkhoz) had been reconstructed since the German invasion. When he arrived home he found two horses left in the village, most of the farmers living in underground earth shelters, old men and women doing most of the work, bread of a quality worse than he had ever seen. He cut short his month's leave and returned to his unit in Germany after 12 days.

When he told his comrades what he had seen, however, he was arrested and shipped back to Russia.

Mail Is Spot-Checked

Another deserter reported mail from the Soviet Union to troops in Germany gives a glimpse of what life is like in postwar Russia. His mother wrote she no longer had a cow, could not buy any clothing, the horses were all gone from the collective farm, and the tractor station which used to send four tractors now sent only two. The number of illegitimate children was increasing; some of the few remaining men had had children by four or five women.

Mail censorship? The deserter reported mail is spot checked and hence much gets through and, he added, Russians are good at reading between the lines, in letters and newspapers as well.

The fear of having to go home appears to have motivated many a deserter, civilian and soldier, to have taken the fatal step across the Iron Curtain. Witness Vladimir Kuzmetsov.

Once an employe of the Commissariat of Light Industry, he helped to nationalize Polish industry in that section transferred to Russia after the Nazi-Soviet pact. An officer during the war, he was impressed, he said, by the flow of American supplies.

In 1946 he arrived in Berlin as part of the Soviet reparations mission. He helped ship back to Russia every sort of German commodity. On a business trip to Moscow in 1948 he had talked with his wife about making the break for freedom. She advised him to do it, even though she and their children had to be left behind. When early in 1949 he learned he was to be transferred from the Soviet zone of Germany back to Russia in another two weeks, he crossed the border.

New 'Prop-Turbine' Engine Is 'Most Powerful' for Size

By The Associated Press

The United States yesterday claimed the world's most powerful propeller gas-turbine engine for its size and weight.

It delivers two horsepower for each pound of weight.

With permission of the Navy, Allison Division of General Motors Corp. made the first official release of information on the new engine which is designated T-40.

The engine will first be used in the Navy's 70-ton patrol flying boat, the XP5Y, designed for long-range day and night patrol against submarines and for rescue operations.

The big flying boats, built by Consolidated Aircraft Corp. at San Diego, Calif., have been waiting on the new engines for months.

The T-40 comprises twin engines operating as a single unit with a common gearing to counter-rotating six-bladed propellers. For economy, either half of the engine may be used separately while cruising. Four of the twin units will be installed in the XP5Y.

The T-40 delivers 5500 horsepower, the Navy announced. Each separate power unit is 20 inches in diameter and 7 feet long. The twin units weigh 2500 pounds.

It delivers one horsepower for an hour on just over 10 ounces of fuel. Engineers say its efficiency is the highest ever attained by a prop-jet approved for flight. The best piston engines do much better, however, while turbo-jets have a considerably higher fuel-to-power ratio.

Gang-Style Killing In Greenwich Village

New York, Dec. 4 (U.P.)—Police said today they will scour all pawnshops in the city Monday for an expensive wrist watch and ring that belonged to Vito J. Cirello, whose body was found dumped gangland style in a Greenwich Village driveway.

Cirello, 31, had been killed by two shots through the head. Police believed that another motive besides robbery was behind the murder of Cirello, who owned a paper plant and once was convicted on a narcotics charge.

Restaurant and Market Looted Over Weekend

Thieves broke into a restaurant at 910 5th st. nw. early yesterday taking $160 from a safe, meats and whisky.

In another weekend theft, David Polikoff, owner of Dave's Market, 1544 9th st. nw., told police $170 was taken from the cash register.

Some highly placed Republicans are urging the Senate GOP to grab the civil rights ball from the Democrats at the next session of Congress, help push the program to enactment, and take political credit for it.

Part of a new "base-broadening" strategy now developing among Republican higher-ups, the idea mainly stems from the recent New Jersey elections.

While Democrats in other States romped away with easy victories, Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll of New Jersey, an ardent civil rights advocate, was reelected over Frank Hague's Democratic entry, Elmer H. Wene.

Hague's upset won the news play at the time but the real news to Republicans was that Driscoll had clearly captured a large bloc of New Jersey's Negro votes. It was probably the first time since 1928 that a GOP candidate for major office had accomplished such a feat.

How Driscoll did it, by a series of civil rights moves culminating in a new State constitution in 1947, writing sweeping antidiscrimination policies into permanent law, is the subject of increasing GOP discussion on Capitol Hill.

GOP Southern Coalition

For years, a large body of congressional Republicans have played along with a Southern Democratic coalition, at least partly on the theory that the Negro vote, weaned away from the GOP by the Roosevelt New Deal, would continue to vote Democratic anyway.

The New Jersey election results are now giving a strong talking point to Republicans who have long bucked that policy. These insist the GOP can only come back as a major political force by making good on its traditional civil rights pledges. In the process, they say, the Republican Party would "broaden its base" to encourage the support not only of Negroes, but of other large minority groups.

A Senate Republican Policy Committee showdown on the conflicting party viewpoints may develop shortly after Congress reconvenes.

What should bring it to a head is the Senate Democratic Policy Committee decision to call up the McGrath FEPC bill early in January.

GOP Dared Democrats

Senate Republican leaders argued last session that the Democrats were merely "running a bluff" on FEPC, that they were out to show mainly that they couldn't produce the 64 votes required to shut off a filibuster and lay the blame for the civil rights failure on the GOP.

The GOP leadership dared Democrats, instead, to call up a less controversial civil rights measure and antipoll tax bill, garanteeing they could produce enough cloture votes to pass them.

Other Republicans now argue that the GOP should trump the Democratic hand on FEPC by marshalling every Republican vote possible for cloture.

"The 1948 Republican platform very definitely urges legislation to end discrimination in employment," Senator Irving M. Ives (R., N. Y.) said yesterday: "Republicans should support the McGrath (FEPC) bill and do all that they can to see that cloture is invoked in event of a filibuster."

Ives, Senator H. Alexander Smith (R., N. J.) and six other Senate Republicans sponsored an FEPC bill in the Eightieth Congress. The Senate Labor Committee last session substituted their own (McGrath) version and the Senate test will come on that.

GOP Split Also

To date anyway, Republican ranks have been almost as badly split as the Democrats on the FEPC issue, but the New Jersey election results may convince some Republican doubters.

Driscoll ran up a 1390 majority over Wene in Newark's predominately Negro Third Ward, the largest plurality ever received by a Republican in this Democratic bailiwick.

On Atlantic City's North Side, 16 Negro-populated districts which have voted Democratic since 1928 gave Driscoll a 679 majority, even though the white populated balance of the county went for Wene.

Four Negro districts in Montclair, N. J., voted 1393 for Driscoll to 502 for Wene, the exact reverse of their 1948 vote.

Basis of Driscoll's Support

Negro leaders got behind Driscoll following a series of State civil right reforms, ranging from a ban on discrimination in the National Guard to abolition of segregation in New Jersey public schools and public accommodations.

The reforms reached their culmination in the 1947 change in the State constitution, making the broadest civil rights guarantees any State had ever written.

These provide; "No person shall be denied the enjoyment of any civil or military right, nor be discriminated against in the exercise of any civil or military right, nor be segregated in the military or in the public schools, because of religious principles, race, color, ancestry or national origin."

Negro citizens circulated a brochure listing his civil rights achievements under this slogan: "Governor Driscoll doesn't 'talk' about civil rights—he acts!"

Blue Law Halts Yule Carnival At Santa Heim

Nearly 15,000 persons—mostly children descended on Santa Heim, tiny Christmas village near Savage, Md., yesterday to find the day's main attraction, a gala Christmas carnival, closed down.

Just a few hours before the animals and clowns accompanied by Santa Claus and his reindeer were to make their appearance, Maryland State troopers arrived to clamp the lid on festivities.

They were there on orders of State's Attorney Daniel M. Murray, Jr., who was called on to invoke an old Maryland "blue law" that prohibits any work except "work of necessity" on Sunday.

Thousands of Autos

The troopers, headed by Sergt. Champ C. Zumbrun, withstood the disappointed wails of youngsters and protests of grownups and then began the task of directing homeward thousands of automobiles that completely jammed traffic from the village to points nearly 2 miles along the main Washington-Baltimore blvd.

For three hours, from 3 p. m., the time the carnival was to have started, until 6 p. m. police reported cars bumper-to-bumper on the mile of road leading to the main highway. Six troopers were required to keep traffic moving.

Murray said he ordered the carnival closed after complaints of its operation had been received in his office. He refused to identify the complainant.

Harry H. Heim, one of the country's largest Christmas tree decorations manufacturers and sponsor of the carnival, said he received notice of the closing three hours before the performance was to begin.

At that time 3500 persons were already inside the building waiting for the show. Heim said. He added all were given passes to attend following shows or their money was refunded. Carnival performances are scheduled every day and evening except Sundays through December 23.

Give Free Rides

Some good-hearted concessionaires gave the disappointed youngsters free rides and free glimpses of elephants and reindeer, permitted under the law, while others not so legally sold hot dogs and balloons. But their efforts were lost on the thousands of clamoring kids.

Heim, a wealthy Baltimorean, practically bought the small village last year and moved his manufacturing plant there. In spite of the Christmas motif and the numerous yuletide attractions, established by Heim, the venture is admittedly commercial, and admission is charged for most attractions.

Barkleys Here For Stopover

visit his chief when he makes the Boca Raton trip.

The Barkleys passed the last three days in New York, where the "Veep" addressed a Democratic banquet Thursday night.

A traveling companion on the trip from New York was Mr. Barkley's daughter, Mrs. Max Truitt of Washington.

One cameraman, asking Mrs. Barkley to give a "big smile," made the mistake of addressing her as Mrs. Hadley, Mrs. Veep snapped back:

"Mrs. Barkley, please!"

The photographers also asked Barkley for a "big smile," and he quipped:

"Some of these days I'm going to have a serious picture made of myself."

Barkley said he and Mrs. Barkley had a "wonderful time down South and in New York." A reporter complimented the "Veep" on his appearance.

"I feel wonderful," he countered.

Sparkling in a gray hat, black Persian lamb jacket, and an immense corsage of purple orchids, Mrs. Barkley was congratulated by her husband's chauffeur, Wilbur Walker, waiting at the station.

"Congratulations to you, too," she returned. The chauffeur also is a newlywed.

Leasing Plan Urged to Ease Parking Ills

Government purchase of downtown areas for off-street parking was suggested last night as the best solution for Washington's growing parking pains.

The land would be acquired through the Government's power of eminent domain, then leased out to private entrepreneurs.

Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the district division of the American Automobile Association, who made the suggestion on the "District Round Table" over radio station WWDC, said private parking agencies are unable to buy the land.

Should Be Given Funds

He said the Motor Vehicle Parking Agency should be given funds to assemble the land. A possible source of these funds, he said, might come from parking meter nickels which now go into the general highway fund.

Cleveland, John F. Victory, former chairman of the Washington Board of Trade's parking committee, and Wallace L. Braun, deputy director of vehicles and traffic, all agreed that an attractive fringe parking plan would be an alternative solution.

Both Cleveland and Victory warned that unless the parking problem is attacked soon, blighting and decentralization on a large scale would result in the central business area.

Oppose Philadelphia Plan

All three speakers agreed that the recently suggested Philadelphia plan for prohibiting all parking in the 100 block downtown area is not necessary in Washington.

Washington's wider streets make it possible to allow parking in the off-peak periods whereas Philadelphia needs the full width of its narrow downtown streets for traffic movement, Braun said.

New Witness in Bridges Case

San Francisco, Dec. 4 (AP).—The Government plans to call another key witness in the Harry Bridges perjury and conspiracy trial this week.

"I will call two more witnesses to corroborate the testimony of (John) Schomaker," said F. Joseph Donohue, special assistant to the United States Attorney General.

"Then I will call a new witness—a key witness. This man's name has never been mentioned in the investigation or any of the proceedings."

Schomaker, a former longshoreman, and Henry Schrimpf, a longshore walking boss, both have testified that they formerly were members of the Communist Party and that Bridges took an active part in Communist Party councils during the 1934 longshore strike here. Schomaker testified Bridges was a party member.

Bridges is accused of perjury for saying at his 1945 naturalization hearing that he never had been a member of the Communist Party.

Enthusiastic Crowd Hears Moiseiwitsch

By Richard Keith

Benno Moiseiwitsch, veteran piano virtuoso, played yesterday afternoon at Constitution Hall to a rather small but very enthusiastic audience. Perhaps Moiseiwitsch lacks the sensationalism with which some of our other concert performers draw capacity crowds but in some respects he surpasses them musically.

Although his program included a full measure of showy music, it completely avoided the conventional war horses. The audience didn't seem to miss them.

Moseiwitsch, whose interpretive style is broadly romantic, was at his very best in the Schumann "Kreisleriana." Here, he projected the twisting irregular melodies and harmonies of this strange set of pieces with a clarity and understanding that is seldom encountered. In the hands of most players this work is left to flounder in confusion.

The great "Waldstein" sonata of Beethoven received a thunderous, breathtaking, if somewhat exaggerated, performance. His race through the last half of the last movement, complete with glissandos, brought cheers from the audience.

Keeping in mind the china-like quality of the harpsichord tone, he played the two Scarlatti sonatas in brisk yet sensible tempos with carefully planned tonal variety on a minute scale.

After intermission his attention was directed totally and without stint to pianistic display. To pieces by Weber-Tausig, Rachmaninoff and Liszt, he brought the full range of his prodigious yet unostentatious technique.

Moiseiwitsch's playing is not relaxed or particularly fluent, listening to him and watching him sometimes become a strain. While his soft playing is carefully shaded and varied, his loud playing tends to follow a uniform dynamic level throughout. Nevertheless, his perfection in matters of phrasing and his convincing interpretations combine to make him not only one of the last of the pianists of the "grand manner," but one of today's finest artists.

Indians Offer Republicans Deal in Votes

Emporia, Kans., Dec. 4 (AP).—The Republican Party will be offered a bloc of 1,700,000 voter if it pledges support of the League of Nations of Pan-American Indians.

W. C. Foster, Emporia, chairman of the league's national legislative committee, said the bloc represents the voters of Indians or persons of Indian descent in the league. The offer was approved at a meeting today.

Foster said the league adopted a resolution recommending that William Zimmerman, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, be removed from office. The resolution, according to Foster, charged Zimmerman with inefficiency in handling Indian affairs because of antagonism toward the tribes.

Foster said the league represents all Indian tribes in the Nation.

Physicians Gather For AMA Meeting

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

Numerous get-togethers are scheduled today for doctors convening here for the third annual Clinical Session of the American Medical Association.

Today's events are preliminaries to the official opening tomorrow of organized medicine's mid-year convention for general practitioners.

Among today's features will be the premiere of a new training film for doctors. It is the second in a series of professional films on cancer diagnosis.

The 2:30 p. m. showing will be limited to about 200 guests including some of the top cancer specialists aand research workers in the country. It will be shown in the South American Room, at the Statler Hotel, sponsored by the National Cancer Institute of the United States Public Health Service and the American Cancer Society.

One unique party today at the Mayflower Hotel is one for Arkansas physicians with razorback hogs as door prizes.

The Arkansas party has been arranged by Dr. R. B. Robins of Camden, Ark., member of the coordiating committee of AMA's national education campaign, and Democratic National Committeeman.

The clinical session beginning tomorrow is expected to attract more than 5000 physicians and guests. The scientific meetings, with some 15 running concurrently, will be held at the District's National Guard Armory. There, too, will be the hundreds of scientific and technical exhibits.

Business affairs of organized medicine, expected to center around efforts to thwart national compulsory health insurance, will be conducted in meetings of AMA's House of Delegates, Tuesday and Thursday, at the Statler, headquarters hotel for the convention.

One of the opening day features of the clinical session will be selection by the House of Delegates of the "General Practitioner of the Year," chosen for exceptional service to his community.

Television of surgical procedures are no longer new to doctors, but at this meeting they will get double billing, one a color television set-up and the other a magnified screening of black-and-white television. Both, brought in on nonpublic circuits from hospitals, will be shown at the Armory.

The color television will originate at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, and will be microwaved through towers at Jessups and Cheverly, Md., to the Armory. It marks the first city-to-city color telecast of surgery.

Scheduled for viewing on the color screens are such operations as the "blue baby" heart surgery, partial removal of a stomach, an operation for breast cancer, and other operations on the chest, eye, prostrate gland, gall bladder and even the brain.

Similarly, black-and-white television of operations being performed at Gallinger Hospital here will be beamed to the Armory where they will be magnified on a 6 by 8 foot screen.

The black-and-white program was arranged by Georgetown and George Washington University Schools of Medicine.

Lewis Seeks 95-Cent Hike

and appears traceable to Lewis' decision to put the miners back on a three-day work week beginning today.

The truck miners, some with surface operation using bulldozers and heavy gouging equipment, insist they have to work a full week in order to break even. They truck their coal to near railroad outlets for marketing.

Major Southern operators no doubt will try hard to dissuade the 34 truckers from buckling.

The reported tentative settlement would make no change in the "memorial" periods allowed under the old contract, or in the clause declaring that miners work only when "able and willing." Both provisions have been used by Lewis in the past two years for Nation-wide walkouts.

The major operators have insisted that Lewis amend those provisions to guarantee they will not be used for big strikes. They also want Lewis to attach some strings to his spending of the welfare fund. The Pikeville agreement reportedly would offer no such restrictions.

2 New Schools Dedicated in Alexandria Area

Two new elementary schools, in use since early September, were formally dedicated at separate exercises in the Alexandria area yesterday.

About 1000 persons attended the dedication of the new Blessed Sacrament School at Braddock and Seminary rds. in Alexandria, where the exercises were led by Msgr. William J. McDonald of Catholic University. Participating in the program was Msgr. Leo J. Ryan vicar general of the diocese of Richmond.

Entertained at Dinner

Following the dedication ceremonies participants in the program were entertained at a dinner in the new school by its Home and Service League. The Rev. Martin Quinn is pastor of the new school which provides instruction for pupils from the first through the fourth grades.

In Fairfax County the new Hollin Hall Elementary School was dedicated formally at the new school site on Ft. Hunt rd., at Hollin Hall. About 300 persons attended.

Speakers included Fred W. Robinson, chairman of the county school board and W. T. Woodson, county school superintendent, who told of the need for greater space in county schools as the result of heavily increased enrollment.

The Hollin Hall School which now includes four classrooms, is an "expandable" type of building, designed to permit addition of more classrooms when the need demands.

FHA's New Ruling

The new rule making properties that may hereafter be covered by written restrictive racial agreements ineligible for FHA mortgage insurance is a logical follow-up of the Supreme Court decision forbidding enforcement of covenants of this kind. But the ruling does not, as some persons seem to think, ban FHA financing of projects in communities where segregation exists. It merely denies the use of FHA financing facilities to builders who, after an unspecified date, enter into written agreements restricting the use or sale of their properties on the basis of race, creed or color. Since judicial enforcement of agreements of this nature is no longer possible in view of the Supreme Court decision in the covenant cases, regardless of financing methods, there seems to be little likelihood that real estate interests will enter into such written agreements in any event.

The FHA has now made it plain that there is nothing to prevent landlords from disposing of their properties as they see fit or making informal agreements regarding the use and sale of FHA-financed properties. As a matter of fact, the Supreme Court decision did not invalidate restrictive agreements, written or unwritten; it merely made their observance dependent on the willingness of the parties to abide by their terms.

Although this newspaper deplores any form of racial or religious discrimination, it realizes that local customs and prejudices responsible for such discrimination can be broken down only by degrees. If the new FHA ruling meant that the agency would provide no financial support for projects without positive proof that racial discrimination would not be practiced by the beneficiary, its usefulness would be seriously impaired, if not destroyed. For in all parts of the country, North, South, East and West, racial discrimination in respect of housing is the rule.

The Federal public housing authorities unaffected by the FHA ruling do not deny funds to communities in which segregation exists. To do so would penalize white and colored citizens alike. They do, however, require a fair distribution of funds in the interest of minority groups. Under existing conditions that is the only feasible method of operation. It would defeat the purpose of public housing legislation to attach conditions that many States and municipalities would refuse to accept. The FHA is likewise dependent on local approval, if it is to continue to function effectively and meet the needs of the communities it serves. Since the new order applies only to written agreements not recognized by the courts, it is likely to have little effect on the actual lending activities of FHA. The chief value of the ruling is that it will enable the agency, as Solicitor General Perlman says, to "implement the decision of the Supreme Court" by refusing to do business with any individual or group known to be parties to restrictive covenants that are unconstitutional and un-American.

Streamlining Drive

Dr. Robert L. Johnson, the national chairman of the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report, recently estimated that 20 percent of the reforms recommended in that report have been adopted. These reforms, it is said, make possible savings up to $1,250,000,000. If the improved governmental machinery outlined in the report is fully installed and given a chance to operate, Dr. Johnson and other experts who served on the research task forces believe that as much as five billion dollars a year can be saved. This may be an exaggeration, but certainly the opportunity for savings is great.

It is clear in any event that the major task of getting the reforms adopted and put into practice is yet ahead. For that reason, the formation last week of the Greater Washington Citizens Committee for Reorganization, under the chairmanship of William R. Castle and with the support of many other distinguished local citizens, is a significant event. Especially here in the Capital the cause of reorganization will need every ounce of support that can be mustered behind it. Perhaps even more important is the announcement that the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations have thrown their support behind the broad objectives of the Hoover Commission report.

There can be no question about the overwhelming public demand for the consolidation of overlapping agencies and the elimination of waste motion in the Government service. The difficult problem is to compel ambitious bureaucrats and politically minded legislators to accept the reforms proposed by experts. The history of reorganization movements in the past has been that the experts have made their proposals and Congress and the bureau chiefs affected have filed them away for posterity. Now at last a healthy public sentiment appears to give promise of compelling the Government to undergo a scientific reducing diet. There are few more important tasks to which citizens can devote their civic energy.

Parking The Cars

Virtually all the authorities who have studied Washington's traffic congestion are agreed that drastically improved parking facilities are a must. The best practicable answer lies in a combination of plans—more off-street parking facilities for shoppers downtown plus fringe parking lots close to incoming traffic arteries to accommodate all-day parkers. Successful fringe parking of course necessitates rapid public transportation to and from downtown. As a corollary, the best use of downtown streets probably will necessitate a severe limitation on, and perhaps eventual abolition of, on-street parking.

Basically this is the approach followed in other cities, and it is the approach that in theory is being tried here. Congress in 1942 created the Motor Vehicle Parking Agency to work for just such facilities. The parking agency has authority to acquire parking lots and garages and to lease them or to arrange for municipal operation. It has the power of condemnation through the District Commissioners.

Although its activities were impeded by the war, the Motor Vehicle Parking Agency has been reasonably successful in one aspect of its program. It has promoted the construction of several private parking facilities in the downtown district. The new garage which George Washington University plans to build is one example of the sort of development that the parking agency has encouraged; the Cafritz Building, with parking space contained in the structure itself, is another.

Irrespective of these advances, however, the parking agency so far has made little dent on the over-all congestion. It has not yet developed the fringe parking lots which are essential companions to more facilities downtown. The two fringe lots opened in Washington last year never had a fair trial. To begin with, they were not really fringe lots. One was too close to the downtown area to relieve congestion; the other was in an extremely awkward location. Neither was close to major arteries of incoming traffic.

Lack of sufficient cooperation on the part of all interested parties undoubtedly is one factor that has held up the parking program. But another and more fundamental reason is that the parking agency has held to the view that any changes must be accomplished wholly within the realm of private enterprise. There is warrant for believing that some of the more far-reaching solutions will not be attractive to private enterprise, or at least not to private enterprise by itself.

The plain fact is that Washington's traffic congestion is becoming worse instead of better. As just one example, more cars cross the Potomac into Washington each day than cross the Hudson River into New York. There has been no vigorous campaign to persuade workers not to drive their cars downtown. The confusion is compounded by the hodgepodge of Government parking regulations. Nor is it uncommon for some Federal employes to get to work before breakfast in order to compete for the unrestricted spaces along the Mall.

If the bulk of the traffic is to be siphoned off before it has a chance to congest the downtown area, then obviously fringe lots must be provided in numbers and in convenient spots—for example, near the Virginia end of the principal bridges; on Connecticut ave., 16th st. and similar arteries near Florida ave.; west of Georgetown; along the Anacostia River, and so on.

Here is where the limitations of private enterprise are apparent. To be successful, fringe lots must be located on land where the taxes are relatively low, and the parking charges also must be low. The chances of substantial profits are slim, and probably most fringe parking would not attract private operators. Also, many of the best locations are already occupied.

These are formidable obstacles, but they are not insuperable. For example, the Commissioners' condemnation powers, judiciously applied, could be a great asset in obtaining necessary land. In all probability the operation of such lots would require some sort of subsidy—either through purchase and low-cost lease by the District government or by payments from merchants who wish to make downtown shopping more convenient. What is necessary is for the parking agency to assert its leadership and to look beyond private enterprise, if that is necessary, in this problem of community concern. Leaving aside the more ambitious projects such as the underground parking garage in San Francisco, there is room for substantial progress in the full exploitation of fringe lots.

Obviously any such program will require the thorough cooperation of many groups—the highway and traffic departments, the Park and Planning Commission, the Board of Trade, the transit companies, to name a few. It is necessary first of all to overcome petty objections to the use of available sites. Washington cannot have its cake and eat it too; if cars are to be accommodated something will have to give, and occasionally beauty must be sacrificed to utility. Fringe parking is by no means the whole answer to the traffic snarl—there also must be better highways, more express buses and encouragement of workers to leave their cars at home. But there can be no real improvement until something substantial is done about parking.

Negligent Virginia

Virginians cannot afford to be complacent about the shocking condition of the State's mental hospitals as related in the Duke report to Governor Tuck. This report (which was summarized in a series of articles by Richard Morris in this newspaper) is not an expose in the sensational sense, but rather a sober study of an appalling waste of human resources and ultimately of money. It is hard to see how the Legislature can realistically avoid accepting Mr. Duke's recommendation that the mental health program receive top financial priority along with the schools.

This study does not mean that the Legislature has been insensitive to the need to improve mental care facilities. State Senator Charles R. Fenwick of Arlington has rendered invaluable service in focusing attention on the need for more buildings, and the State already is embarked on an expansion program. The Duke report supports this program; it shows, for example, that the hospital population is 20 percent above rated capacity, that some patients must sleep on the floor and that several buildings are 175 years old. But the report also cites an even more pressing need: increased medical staffs.

Quite rightly, we believe, the Duke report places its major emphasis on reduction of the case load by restoring curable patients to society. It is here that the Virginia program is the most inadequate. For 12,069 patients there is a total of only 21 doctors, classified as physicians. According to American Psychiatric Association standards there should be 106 psychiatrists and 14 other physicians for this number of patients. The Duke report is more moderate in what it recommends—56 psychiatrists and 10 other physicians over a five-year period.

Obviously a major limitation on obtaining more medical personnel has been the low salaries paid. Senior physicians, for instance, receive a maximum of $7416, and some doctors receive as little as $4848, from which maintenance is deducted. The Duke report makes no specific recommendation on salary increases for doctors and attendants, but it does stress the need to construct immediately the Virginia Institute of Psychiatry at Richmond as the most practicable means of attracting more young doctors.

The 52 million dollars which the Duke report recommends for new construction over the next 10 years is a great deal of money, though less than the amount necessary to bring the hospitals up to standard. With proper appreciation of the need and assignment of priorities, however, it should be possible to accomplish a great deal toward reconstituting mental hospitals as centers of rehabilitation rather than dark holes to which patients are bundled off and forgotten.

Railroad Rates

In a communication on the opposite page, Mr. Elisha Friedman argues that the recent railroad passenger fare increase is more than justified by increased costs and featherbed rules. We do not dispute the justification for the increase. Much of what Mr. Friedman says about the impossible burden of made work is undeniably true, and the Interstate Commerce Commission ought to take the lead in calling for modifications of the Railway Labor Act as well as for more realistic rate regulation. What we do question is the wisdom of a rate increase that places rail passenger fares above those charged by the airlines in many instances. It is no secret that some of the railroads are not much concerned at the thought of driving away passenger business because the great bulk of their revenue comes from freight. The New Haven Railroad offers a refreshing contest to this trend; it has advertised an actual reduction on one-day round-trip coach fares and no increase on 30-day round trips. But most of the other Eastern lines have adopted what seems to us a foolishly negative attitude that not only overlooks the proved potential in passenger service when it is made attractive, but also raises the possibility of increased expenses from passenger runs because of sparsely filled coaches. The fact is that the railroads are likely to be in the passenger business for a long, long time as a requirement of the public interest; and whatever they do to alienate traffic in the long run only harms their own position.

Students Abroad

The educational agreement just signed with Australia calls attention to the highly constructive way in which proceeds from sales of surplus American war materiel are being used abroad. Under the Fulbright Act, some of this money goes to finance studies and research of Americans in foreign universities, as well as to pay the travel expenses of foreign students coming to the United States. Agreements for these purposes are now in effect with 14 countries. The pact with Australia is an especially notable gain because of the long delay in completing it. Some 26,000 foreign students are already in the United States, most of them studying under private auspices, but some through provisions of the Smith-Mundt Act. With the knowledge and techniques thus acquired, they will constitute a great source of good will for this country. But as we seek to tell the world about America, it is no less important that we obtain a fuller understanding of the peoples and customs of other countries. In this respect American students abroad can serve as two-way ambassadors.

Peace Ship Anniversary

Thirty-four years ago next week the Ford Peace Ship was launched on a sea of ridicule by the American press. The sailing of that argosy was the climax of 14 months of superhuman agitation by Rosika Schwimmer on behalf of a neutral conference for continuous meditation to bring about a peaceful settlement of the then still European War.

It was Woodrow Wilson's failure promptly to organize a "third force" of neutral nations that led to the enlistment of Henry Ford to finance an unofficial neutral conference designed to pioneer the way and to increase pressure on behalf of collective mediatory efforts by the governments. Contrary to popular belief, the Peace Ship itself was a success, for by this dramatic gesture news of peace efforts broke through Europe's wartime consorship and gave her peoples a flicker of hope. It was the unofficial neutral conference that was choked to death with a cruelty and a levity that historians have characterized as "appalling."

The failure of this venture had only two victims. The first was Rosika Schwimmer, who never quite succeeded in fighting her way out of the muck that was heaped upon her. The second was humanity itself, which has not had even the illusion of peace restored to it since.

On the thirty-fourth anniversary of the sailing of the Peace Ship the world is still at war and none dares predict a happy ending. If we are luckier than we are wise, perhaps the chronicler of the distant future will be able to say of this period:

"A peculiar characteristic of the first half of the twentieth century was the tendency of the peoples to honor mass murderers and to assassinate spiritually or physically their greatest peacemakers. But in the later part of this era, due to conditions not yet clear to us, a complete change of social values took place. World government was finally negotiated, the military caste was abolished, repression and violence were made crimes against society and the present era of human happiness began. EDITH WYNNER.

British Ingenuity

Here is a story from England which suggests some good ideas for young folks in this country who can't find homes.

Fifty former servicemen of Birmingham (England), tired of endless waiting, got together and decided that, working as a team, they would build their own bungalows. They got expert advice and assistance from a local architect, applied for licenses and overcame all local obstacles. Each man contributed 20 pounds towards buying a lorry, a concrete mixer and other equipment, and obtained the support of a building society.

Then for over six months the men went into training. Every weekend, every evening was spent in learning how to construct walls, how to mix concrete and all the various jobs involved in building a bungalow. The scheme is one of voluntary labor, and the only professional is a builder's foreman who helps and inspires his team of amateur builders.

All through the summer the men worked at every available moment. They refused to be discouraged by difficulties that arose from time to time. Engineers, mechanics, clerks, they have gone right along, digging the draining ditches, plumbing and welding, putting in window frames. In spite of this intensive labor their efficiency at their own jobs has been increased. The stimulus of seeing their own homes going up has been the greatest incentive they could have.

Needless to say the wives have seized this opportunity to have their say on the location of kitchen sinks, placing of cupboards. The bungalows are allotted to men on a point system arranged by themselves, according to the greatest need. But as each family moves in, each man continues working until the whole 50 families are happily and comfortably housed. It is now in order to sing, Rule Brittania!

German Troublemakers

It seems that some of us have very short memories. Surely the people who are asking for a rearmed Germany have forgotten how much the world has suffered at the hands of the Germans. Surely they have forgotten that for centuries they fought tribal wars and that as a nation they have started three major wars in less than a hundred years.

When you come down to hard facts the major troubles facing the world today stem from the Germans. If there had been no World War II there would be no Russian menace. If there had been no Germans there would have been no Pearl Harbor. Without German scientists there would be no atom bomb.

Planning Review

I have been a subscriber to your paper for more than a quarter of a century, but I think that I have never read a review of any book which was so testy as the little, unsigned review of our 1949 American Planning and Civil Annual. It would almost seem as though the writer must have been the victim of "required reading."

It seems only fair to call your attention to the fact that our Annual, like the Encyclopedia Britannica Book of the Year, does not pretend to be a text book or treatise on planning. It does report on current interesting developments in city, regional and national planning. In this, as in every Annual issued since 1929, we have printed our aims as "the education of the American people to an understanding of local, State, regional and national planning for the best use of urban and rural land, and of water and other resources." There are many other types of planning, but we have defined our field.

As for the National Citizens Conference on Community Planning, held at Oklahoma City, it was attended by many eminent leaders in planning and civic improvement throughout the country and we have received scores of appreciative comments on the program.

Of course no annual report or conference is so good that it could not be better. We are trying to make the National Citizens Conference on Planning, which we shall hold in Washington on May 12-17, 1950, as a feature of the Sesquicentennial celebration, better than any in the past and we expect then to present addresses, exhibits and tours of the Washington region which will make our delegates proud of their Federal city.

"The Defensive In War"

Your November 25 editorial on Dr. Vannevar Bush's book Modern Arms and Free Men unfortunately reinforced the erroneous general impressions conveyed by earlier reviewers (a) that the atomic bomb can be safely regarded as a less than absolute weapon and (b) that we need not unduly fear a future attack, because in God's good time (which will be granted us) the defense will gain an ascendancy over the offense.

In consequence of these reviews, which have seized on the most optimistic of the Bushian conclusions, while ignoring the careful (though often obscure) qualifications, the book is in a fair way to becoming a sedative to public awareness of present and future dangers.

To cite only one example of the unwarranted optimism which the book's reviewers have generated: Life Magazine, summarizing the highlights, printed in large block letters at the top of one page "The Atomic Bomb Is Not Absolute." What Dr. Bush actually said was "The atomic bomb is for the immediate future a very important but by no means absolute weapon . . . It will remain in that status as long as there are not great stocks of bombs in the hands of more than one power . . ." (italics mine). The magazine editor chose to play down that significant qualification.

In truth, however, it must be said that the real cause of the false impressions lies with the author, rather than with the reviewers. For Dr. Bush's basic premise, which colors all of his most important conclusions, is that the Soviets would not possess an atomic bomb for a decade and that even more years would be required for the Soviet acquisition of a significant stockpile. In other words, he based his conclusions on the now totally invalid premise that the West would not for 10 or 15 years be confronted with a war in which the enemy possessed atomic weapons.

Within that period, assuming war did not break out, Dr. Bush presumably felt that the defense could develop counter-measures to cope with even the atomic threat. Seen in this time perspective, the almost blinding faith and confidence that shine forth from the pages of Modern Arms and Free Men are better understood.

But that time perspective has now been knocked galley-west. The hoped-for breathing space has vanished before our eyes. And if, in consequence, the Soviets are able to pose a significant atomic threat to Europe or the United States within three years, instead of 15, it is fair to inquire whether Dr. Bush's reassurances are really very accurate guides to the kind of immediate future that new confronts us. For one does not come away from this book with the feeling that a continental radar screen, an active civil defense program, and dispersal of our key industries are urgent considerations for today and tomorrow. One is instead given renewed hope for the long-term future. But can this hope stand up when one learns it is founded on a premise which, like a loose rug, has just been pulled from under it?

One cannot help wishing that Dr. Bush had withheld publication of this book until he had reexamined his conclusions in the light of the President's announcement on September 23.

Matter of Fact

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

New Taxes?

THE PRESENT status of tax policy is another good example of the Truman Administration's increasing tendency to take the comfortable road. Some weeks ago, the President himself told his press conference that he would ask Congress for substantial tax increases, in order to cover part of the expected Federal deficit. Forward estimates of the deficit are currently floating around six billion dollars. Yet it now appears quite probable that no drastic tax rises will be proposed after all.

To be sure, President Truman's decision on this important aspect of his 1950 program is yet to be made. Before leaving for Key West, he asked both the Treasury and the Council of Economic Advisers to prepare memoranda on tax policy, for his use while on holiday. The final verdict will be given after these memoranda have been digested, when the President goes to work in earnest on his budget message.

Meanwhile, however, it is already pretty apparent that the President will have to reverse his advisers, if he keeps to his press conference promise to demand a heavy tax increase. It is very rare indeed for Secretary of the Treasury John Snyder and the present senior member of the economic advisory council, Leon Keyserling, to agree on any subject. But the signs suggest they do agree for once (although for very different reasons) that important new taxes are undesirable at this time.

AS BETWEEN these two men, Snyder's position is the least certain. Within the Treasury staff, there are two fairly well marked schools of thought. One school favors early budget-balancing, by raising taxes if need be. The other places its main emphasis on the discouragement of further taxes to the business community.

Snyder himself has always been intensely hesitant to do anything that displeases the businessmen. Those who should know accordingly assert that he strongly inclines toward the second Treasury school, opposing immediate heavy tax rises. And this of course fits neatly with his recent surprise testimony, depreciating the sterner sort of budget-balancing, and defending deficit financing as healthy at certain times.

As for the position of the economic advisory council, the theory that prevails there is familiar. In brief, Keyserling and his colleagues assert that the budget should be balanced, not by increases in taxes, but by increases in the national income, which will be automatically reflected in larger tax yields from existing taxes. Tax rises at this time will be deflationary, and will therefore impede the expansion of the national product and income. Hence they are to be avoided.

Of course, even if the Treasury and the economic advisory council give the indicated advice, and even if the President accepts this advice, some changes in tax rates may well be proposed. The question is, not whether taxes will be raised, but whether they will be raised enough to make much difference in the size of the projected Federal deficit. The latter is the real point presently in dispute.

On the former point, it should be remembered that the economic advisory council last year urged selective removal of certain of the wartime-excise taxes. The Treasury then successfully opposed this project. This year, however, removal of some at least of the excise taxes appears fairly probable. If this is decided upon, the President will almost certainly wish to impose other levies considerably more than compensating for the loss of excise revenue. Gifts and inheritance taxes and the corporation tax are the most likely sources.

FROM THIS BRIEF and inadequate review of present tendencies on the tax issue, a far from reassuring picture dimly emerges. The President cannot be accused of being self-indulgent merely because he may change his mind about a big tax increase. The wisdom of such an increase is at least very questionable. The self-indulgence lies, rather, in the obvious failure to come to grips with the underlying issue of basic economic policy.

If the President were really to adopt and act on the Keyserling theory, he would not only propose no important new taxes. He would also have to raise the present crippling limitations on defense spending and do certain other things to stimulate expansion of the national product. And he would have to fight bitterly for this theory before the Congress and the country. On the other hand, if the President were really to adopt and act on the Snyder theory, he would equally have to reduce many popular expenditures which he now plans to increase.

But there is no coherent, dominant theory. Instead, the Administration is trying to avoid all the uncomfortable things, and only do what is comfortable. Going down this road is very pleasant for a while, but only for a while.

Rail Rates, ICC Policy And Featherbed Rules

By Elisha M. Friedman
Consulting Economist

YOUR November 16 editorial on railroad passenger rates, "High-Priced Travel," opens basic questions. Since 1939, passenger fares have increased 26 percent for the entire country and 44 percent for the East. But the cost of materials purchased has increased over 100 percent and wages have almost doubled.

The Interstate Commerce Commission does not bear the risk of failure in its decisions. The risk falls on the stockholder and the responsibility falls on the management. The policy of the ICC has been, generally, to concede lagging and niggardly increases. The return on the investment is insignificant in boom years. Industrial corporation profits for the years 1946 and 1947 were the greatest on record, but the railroads earned only 3.10 percent on the net investment after depreciation. The rate of return for the four years, 1945 to 1948, was about 3.6 percent. What a shocking reflection on the ICC! There were years of phenomenal traffic, about double the prewar years 1938-39. What will be the earnings in the next depression?

For the period 1926-45, the railroads earned an average return of 3.54 percent under ICC regulations, but public utility companies regulated by over 40 State commission were granted 6.43 percent. In the depressed 1930s, the risky railroad business earned 2.22 percent, or less than the rate on riskless United States Government bonds, while public utilities earned 6.26 percent. Obviously there is something wrong with a method of regulating railroad rates which produce such evil results.

From 1916 to 1947, ton miles increased by 182 percent, passenger miles by 133 percent, property investment by 128 percent, annual wages by 296 percent, the hourly wage rate by 352 percent. But net earnings declined to 75 percent, the percentage of return declined to 59 percent and the dividends declined to 77 percent. What sort of rate regulation is that? Let the ICC answer:

RAILROAD rates are set by the ICC on the theory that the railroads have a monopoly of transportation. The present rate-making policy was legislated in 1906, actually in the days of the horse-drawn buggy, car and truck. These constituted no competition to the railroads. The gas and Diesel engine replaced the horse and diverts traffic from the railroad. But the ICC lives in bygone days.

The diversion of traffic, feared by the ICC, is a genuine danger. But it is superficial thinking to look at rates alone as the cause. The competitors of the railroad, namely the bus, automobile, airplane and the waterways, are all subsidized by the Government.

What are the remedies? The ICC law must be changed. The discretionary power of the ICC as to the effect of a rate on the volume of traffic should be eliminated. This is a managerial function. The law should restore the requirement of the 1920 act repealed in 1933, that the railroads are entitled to a fair return. The ICC should follow the precedent of the State commissions and the courts which have granted returns twice that allowed by the ICC.

If the average return is to be fair, then the peak return in prosperity should be high to offset the return in depression years when it inevitably is low. Current Government policy has been tested and found wanting. A new approach is necessary. Congress should legislate a fair return and reduce regulation in such a highly competitive industry.

THE REDUCTION in rates recommended by the ICC minority is a superficial approach to the problem. It deals with symptoms instead of causes. Any attempt to deal with selling prices must involve consideration of costs.

The problem requires an independent investigation by an impartial fact-finding body. The Brookings Institution could do this job. Perhaps some fund like the Falk Foundation could finance such a study. It would undoubtedly result in constructive proposals in the national interest.

Vast sums are involved. Of railroad gross operating revenue of 9.6 billion dollars in 1948, total wages are about 50 percent If labor waste were eliminated and road crews paid by the hour instead of by the mile, based on 1875 speeds of 100 miles per day, costs could be substantially reduced. Then freight and passenger rates could be corresponding lower. Furthermore, if the managers were not blocked by union rules, it would be possible to effect important economies, by consolidation, by coordination and by new equipment, like one-man cars, gasoline or Diesel, offering combination of freight and passenger service at frequent intervals. These could further reduce costs and passenger rates.

The dual basis of pay must be eliminated or modernized. Men should be paid for work done. There should be no pay for work not done. Featherbed rules are illegal under the Taft-Hartley Act which does not apply to railroads. The Railway Labor Act of 1926 must be amended to afford similar protection. On the basis of pay for a 40-hour week for road employes, and on airways, waterways and most bus and truck lines, railroad costs would be substantially reduced and a host of overpayments due to featherbedding would disappear.

AN INVESTIGATION should include an analysis of (1) the policy of the ICC since 1920 with reference to its statutory duties and powers and the financial consequences; (2) the changes in our national economy and the effect on the railroads; (3) the practices of the unions with reference to wages and labor costs, the increase in the number of cases of featherbedding and in the amount of payments awarded as referees' decisions continuously open new loopholes, how new cases entered the docket faster than old cases were decided until a five-year backlog culminated in the Missouri Pacific strike; (4) competition and the effect on the shipper and the investor; and (5) the policies of Federal, State and local authorities with reference to subsidies to highway, airway and waterway transport, discrimination and unequal competition, unequal taxation, excess crew laws and abandonment of unprofitable lines.

Such an analysis would show that from 1916 to 1948 wages rose from 1469 million dollars to 4768 million dollars while dividends declined from 306 million dollars to 289 million dollars. In 1916 dividends constituted about 21 percent of wages and in 1948 about 6 percent. An increase in dividends by 50 percent would cost only 3 percent total wages and an increase of 100 percent in dividends would cost only 6 percent of total wages.

Such increased dividends, however, would make it possible to raise new moneys through common stock issues again for the first time since 1929, to modernize equipment, to increase efficiency, to lower costs, to meet competition and to maintain jobs on the railroads. A 6 percent saving in labor costs would easily be possible with the cooperation of the railroad unions in abandoning featherbed rules, restrictive labor practices and by having the States repeal the excess crew laws enacted under union pressure.

Someone must furnish new money continuously to enable the railroads to serve the people. The present policies brought practically no new money for over 20 years. Indeed the present policy resulted in the confiscation of over two billion dollars of stocks and junior bonds by the ICC in the recent railroad bankruptcies. Britain under socialism nationalized the railroads but paid the investors a reasonable price for their securities. But the United States, under private enterprise, wiped out securities owners in bankruptcy. Obviously, American government railroad policy for 20 years proved ruinous. A fundamental change is required—and promptly.

Federal Bar Luncheon To Hear O'Mahoney

Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) will speak on "The Role of the American Lawyer in Preserving the American Way of Life" at a Federal Bar Association luncheon at 12:15 p. m. Wednesday in the Willard Hotel.

Among the guests expected to attend are Veterans Administrator Carl Gray, jr., Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren, Federal Trade Commissioners John Carson and James B. Mead, Edward B. Williams, vice president of the D. C. Bar Association, and Commissioner John Russell Young.

of manufacturers what proportion of the volume of business was conducted by the biggest four, eight, 20 and 50 companies in the industry.

These data are expected to give a clearer picture of concentration of business than recent data compiled by the Federal Trade Commission, showing concentration of capital assets. Where the FTC study showed bigness in size of capital, the Commerce study showed it in volume of shipments, or sales.

It showed for example, that in 48 of the 452 industries, the top four companies did 75 or more percent of the business while the top eight companies had at least 84 percent of the volume.

For examples, of the three industries in this group which had more than one billion dollars' worth of shipments a year, the four top concerns had 90 percent of the cigarette volume, 79 percent of soap and glycerin manufacture and 76 percent of tires and inner tubes.

In 130 of the industries comparable data were obtainable for the situation in 1935. In 58 of these, concentration of volume in the first four companies of each increased in the 12-year period. In the other 78 industries, concentration in the top four decreased.

In the big industries, doing a volume of business of half a billion dollars or more, there appeared to be more increases of concentration to the top four; in industries of smaller size, the concentration seemed to decrease.

The accompanying table shows the status of concentration in the 38 American industries whose 1947 volme of shipments was one billion dollars or more.

Seven Frenchmen Reach Home Soil

Paris, Dec. 4 (NYHT).—Seven French citizens expelled from Poland as a result of Franco-Polish tension reached French soil today, including one who attempted to prevent his own repatriation and had earlier been reported dead.

The mystery man was Guy Auffrey, who apparently fled the train that was carrying the Frenchmen back to Paris, and who was later picked up by police in the French zone of Germany. He is continuing his trip to Paris under escort. Early reports said he had been killed in a fall from the train.

His associates, who arrived in Paris today, reported Auffrey had expressed distaste at the prospect of returning to France, and the intention of preventing it.

New York to Scrimp On Water 3 Years

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—The sad truth dawned on New Yorkers today that they will have to scrimp for three years.

Not on food, clothes, amusements or liquor—but on water, plain water. Luxury-loving Gotham had to swallow the homeliest of maxims: "Waste not, want not."

And New York was not alone in dwindling water supplies.

The Nation's largest city had to look no farther than 60 miles away to see what happens when a community lacks water.

In little Roosevelt, N. J. (population 900), its two artesian wells went dry on Monday.

The town's two factories shut down, putting 225 persons out of work. The public school was closed. People drank soft drinks. Water — a mere trickle — was hauled from Hightown, seven miles away. But it was quickly absorbed.

A third of the population abandoned town for wetter locations.

On Saturday night well-drillers struck water and the six dry days came to an end.

In New York the basic facts were simple.

The "normal" rate of water consumption was 1,200,000,000 gallons a day.

The city's reservoirs up-State were down to 3" percent of capacity and continued to dwindle. They could drop only to 25 percent to exert enough pressure to deliver water to the city at the normal rate.

Water Commissioner Stephen J. Carney warned that New Yorkers must consume 200 million gallons less water a day.

New supplies will be available in 1952 and 1956 when successive phases of the Delaware River project are completed, the commissioner said. But until then, it seemed, New Yorkers must scrimp.

Carney said New York has only one chance in five of filling its reservoirs by next June.

In New Brunswick, N. J., the president of the Council of Churches called upon 31 congregations to pray for rain. Sermons and prayers were offered over the weekend.

In Jersey City, it was announced that water pressure would be cut December 6 unless the area had a "substantial rainfall" prior to then. The situation was termed critical by a New Jersey engineer.

In Maine, storage reservoirs held only about half the normal amount.

A water shortage threatened Greenwich, Conn., and Port Chester, N. Y.

Serious shortages also existed in the San Joaquin valley of central California, the Salt River valley around Phoenix, Ariz., and the high plains region of Texas.

Jordan Ready To Show Diary

Mont., base, where he had the job of checking and clearing them. He said the suitcases were signed for by Russian officers at Great Falls and then flown over Alaska to Russia.

He said Hopkins ordered him by telephone to rush "two shipments of uranium" totaling 1650 pounds to Russia "as speedily as possible."

Jordan said he "sat" on the story until now because the reported atomic shipments were "common knowledge" in American military circles and that if "they didn't see fit to howl about it, why should I?"

He finally went to the FBI, he said, after Lewis got on the trail of the story.

The Joint Congressional Atomic Energy Committee and the House Committee on Un-American Activities ordered investigations after Jordan told his story on Lewis' radio program.

Lewis said he will produce other witnesses who will confirm Jordan's story.

Jordan was interviewed at Lewis' farm estate near Hollywood, Md., some 40 miles from Washington.

The diary itself contained no personal observations but was confined to such matters as:

"Dmitri Vasilevich Mushin arrived on C-47-92942. 50 suitcases aboard. One contained oil refinery blueprints."

Another notation, dated March 27, 1944, read:

"Mushin departed on C-47-92940 with 3800 pounds black suitcases."

While going through the diary, Jordan removed a piece of ruled notebook paper which he said contained the names of the "two high State Department officials" who allegedly worked with Hopkins in clearing the way for the shipments to Russia. He said the FBI had cautioned him not to make known the names.

Jordan said on the Friday night broadcast that one of the officials currently is "prominent" in the news.

The hefty former officer said that when the black suitcases first started coming through, "I repeatedly warned Air Force officials and the United States Customs Office that Russian couriers were flying unauthorized cargoes out of the country."

"Nothing was ever done to halt it," he added.

An Air Force spokesman told the United Press the Air Force "had never heard of the matter until the Fulton Lewis broadcasts" and that a preliminary check of Air Force records here "does not reflect that such a report was ever made.

The spokesman pointed out that Maj. Gen. Junius W. Jones, Air Inspector General at the time, does not recall such a report.

Early in January, 1944, Jordan said, he took matters into his own hands when a Lend-Lease plane laden with 50 suitcases arrived at Great Falls. He said he summoned two United States guards and walked over to the plane.

"A burley Russian colonel with a big belly stepped between me and the pile of luggage," he said. "He tried to belly me out of the way. I told him I was going to open one of the bags. He mumbled something about 'diplomatic mail' and 'diplomatic immunity.'

"As I ducked around him to get at the pile, he threw himself full length across the cargo and shouted 'Immunity, immunity'."

Jordan said he managed to pry a suitcase off the pile and opened it.

"It was crammed with State documents, maps and photostatic copies of engineering drawings and scientific data labeled 'Oak Ridge, Manhattan Engineering Project,'" he said.

He said it was not until much later that he learned the Manhattan Project was working on the atom bomb.

It was in one of these suitcases, Jordan added, that he found a letter written on White House stationery bearing the name of Harry Hopkins. It carried the initials "HH," he said.

One paragraph, he said, carried the notation:

"Had a hell of a time getting these away from Groves."

Maj. Gen. Leslie R. Groves, wartime boss of the A-bomb project, refused to comment on the reports "until I hear the rest of the story."

Hopkins' Son Asserts Jordan Facts are Wrong

Los Angeles, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—A son of the late Harry Hopkins said tonight his father was "very outspoken" against the threat of world communism and that charges he gave atomic secrets to Russia were "completely incredible."

Hopkins said George Racey Jordan's story showed discrepancies in the following details:

"1. My father never signed anything 'H.H.'

"2. To my knowledge there was never a piece of White House stationery printed with his or anyone else's name on it, as specifically stated by Major Jordan.

"3. Jordan referred to a telephone conversation in February, 1944, between himself and my father. Actually, from January 1 until after July 4 of that year my father was critically ill and almost completely inaccessible.

THE POSE IS FAMILIAR—Liberace, the Milwaukee pianist, is making his movie bow in Universal's "South Sea Sinner" and thought up this pose with Shelley Winters to recall a now historical one. Remember the shot of Vice President Truman at the Press Club with Lauren Bacall in Shelley's pose?

Bandit Killed in Gun Battle After 11-Day Chase in 5 States

Rulo, Nebr., Dec. 4 (AP).— William Dunkin, a fabulous fugitive who parlayed luck and daring into 11 days of freedom, was shot to death today.

A Kansas highway patrolman, W. W. Smith, mowed him down with gunfire at the south edge of this tiny southeast Nebraska corner town.

The Nebraska penitentiary escapee's car had just overturned and "Dunkin came out shooting," Smith said.

Dunkin got off at least five shots before the trooper's guns felled him. The patrolman was not hit.

Thus ended a manhunt that had given headaches to enforcement officers in at least five States —Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, Indiana and Iowa.

Since fleeing the Nebraska penitentiary in Lincoln he had been credited with disarming a Missouri trooper near St. Louis, slipping away from police who had picked him up at Michigan City, Ind., and taking a Nebraska State highway patrol car from two patrolmen in Omaha at gunpoint.

Altogether, he is believed to have used at least 10 stolen cars in his efforts to elude officers.

Last night or early today, Dunkin slipped out of Omaha.

Trooper Smith, stationed at Hiawatha, Kans., picked up a radio call saying Dunkin probably was headed for Hiawatha, not far from St. Joseph.

Smith started east and encountered Dunkin heading west. The trooper turned around and chased his quarry over dusty country roads around the Kansas-Nebraska line finally catching up with him at Rulo.

C. U. Comedy Bows To Trite Characters

By Richard L. Coe

IN CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY'S new play, "The Real McCoy," Dartmouth's John Finch has an idea and a novel setting, but he betrays his disbelief in both by the use of trite characters.

These characters, in turn, lead to trite lines and situations which make most of his new comedy irritating. Father Hartke's players have given it their customary care in production and the settings are by no les a light than Jo Mielziner. It will continue in the University Theater on the campus through the seventeenth, Sunday excepted.

Finch tells of an abandoned museum, cared for by a shy young girl whose sorties into the outside world have made her fear real life. By the will of its late owner, the museum is left to a young lad whose mother, once a burlesque queen and now ambitious for serious drama, and father, a dreamy autobiographer, come to share his home, being unable to pay their rent elsewhere.

It's discovered that in the cellar of this ageing building lives a dragon. A con man from the outside world happens onto this intelligence, offers to buy the place with the idea of reaping a fortune from exhibiting the monster. His offer means the mother would be able to act and the father get his book published. The girl who's been looking after the property doesn't want it sold, for the world frightens her. It's up to the boy to decide what's to be done with his curious inheritance.

In outline, the story is more interesting than it seems on the C. U. stage, where the characters are cardboard figures reacting in puppet fashion to the playwright's demands.

Though she is supposed to know nothing of the outside world and be a shy, gentle lass, the girl twice uses such bobby-soxer terms as "creep" (to describe the dragon); she's evidently not upset by news of the death of the owner and the evident mangling of a friendly policeman doesn't bother her much.

The mother is a stock comic figure, so is the father. The boy, nicely played by James Roxburgh, is called on to behave the way boys behave in the movies (love that girl and why must he work in the burlesque theater?) and the policeman who happens onto this strange spot on his beat has the philosophical loquacity, fondness for burlesque, etc., that has become the hallmark of stage and screen cops. Nor is there any originality in the con man out to milk the unsuspecting, his goonlike assistants or his three learned advisers.

In short, here is Saroyan, Andreyev and Kaufman and Hart rolled up in one napkin. It's too bad, really, for to get at the central idea (and I think there is one, though the playwright's inability to get his curtain down put me off), the characters should all be recast. The idea and setting are good, but the author's lack of courage at devising true characters has been an insuperable flaw.

Roxburgh's long role is capably handled and there's an appealing portrayal of a great shaggy dog by Cassie Meer. I especially like Pete Donahue's policeman, though the cliches, both in words and make-up (humped backed, evidently) are a pity. Still, Donahue's an interesting forceful player with a tremendous amount to learn about acting but a promising personality.

JOHNNY PULEO, the mite of a comic with the Harmonica Rascals, back from his second command performance in London, keeps too busy ever to get home to Washington, but his neighbors will be seeing him tomorrow night on Milton Berle's television show.

THE APEX will be showing "Monsieur Vincent," the French film with Pierre Fresnay as the patient saint, today and tomorrow, the picture's only uptown engagement.

AMERICAN UNVERSITY'S drama group will play "Ladies in Retirement" tonight and tomorrow night at 8:30 in the Clendenen Gymnasium on the campus . . .

Rams Lose on Last Play, Fail to Clinch Title

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

GRIFFITH STAIDUM, Dec. 4.—The Redskins move on to the field against the Packers for their final appearance of the season, and not a game too soon, what with attendance dwindling. Comparatively it barely qualifies as a public exhibition, with only 23,200 customers, the Redskins' smallest home crowd in seven seasons, in the pews.

Earl Girard of the Packers fakes a pass, and the Redskins diagnose the play 34 yards later where Rob Goode overhauls Girard on the Redskins' 21-yard line. At this point, the 'Skins could use a little more snap judgment.

Povich

The Redskins take the ball on downs on their own 4-yard line. There could be no complaint with the Packers' strategy. Needing a yard to make first down, they gave the ball to Tony Canadeo, the league's second-leading ground gainer. His gain was limited to inches.

The Redskins introduce a surprise weapon—a Green Pay punt. Len Szafaryn blocks Girard's boot on the Green Bay 25, and John Badaczewski lugs it to the Packers' 21. And Coach Herman Ball can thanks the immigration quotas.

HARRY GILMER fades back to pass and is trapped, so he uses up his last option and keeps the ball for a 21-yard sprint around left end to the Packers' 6-yard line. Four downs later the Redskins wind up on their own 16, going places but in the wrong direction.

The nicest thing about the Redskins thus far has been the Packers' punting. Sandifer just grabbed one of Girard's boots and legged 46 yards to the Packer 30.

7-0, Redskins. From the Packers' 6-inch line, Sammy Baugh spurned a pass or trick play, and gave the ball to Fullback Ed Quirk. The touchdown was a fate of Quirk, to coin a phrase.

Make it 10-0, Redskins. Dick Poillon just got into the act with a field goal from the 29-yard line. The boot went into the laps of the bleacher fans, and the three points were at the cost of a $14 football.

13-0, REDSKINS. Poillon digs his toe into another field goal, this time from the 21-yard line, and now the Packers have a twelfth man on the field. He's Coach Curly Lambeau who is squawking that the half ran out before the kick was made.

The Redskins introduce Santa Claus between the halves, but Lambeau views him only as a quick-change artist, making his second appearance of the day. In his first appearance, Lambeau claims Santa was wearing white knickers, a striped shirt and masqueraded as John Glascott, the referee.

Lambeau's squawking was not in the Christmas spirit, Referee Glascott rules, so he penalizes the Packers 15 yards on the second-half kick off. Kicking from the Green Bay 45-yard line, Redskin Jim Peebles booted another $14 worth of football over the retaining wall onto the mantle piece of a lucky fan.

20-0, Redskins. Sammy Baugh, of all people sprints 8 yards with the ball. It wasn't quite premeditated. Back to pass, Baugh had his choice either of eating the ball, getting rid of it, or going for a touchdown in a field denuded of Packers.

GIRARD OF THE Packers gets off a long pass to Al Demao, the Redskins' defensive center, and then Baugh shows the Packer passer how its properly done by pitching one to Tommy Mont on the Green Bay 7.

27-0, Redskins. With the ball on the Packers' one-yard line, Baugh generously calls the signal of Rookie Back John Hollar to let that young man score his first pro league touchdown.

30-0, Redskins. They're three-deep in field goals by Dick Poillon today. He just kicked another from the 30-yard line to tie the record for three placements in a single game.

The Redskins are attacking again deep in Packer territory, but they bog down when Tommy Mont calls the Statue of Liberty play and winds up with a 7-yard loss on a hand-off to Goode. Redskins fans are in favor of sending the old girl back to France.

The Packers finally get possession of the ball again, but with only four seconds left to play they can be said to be in foul shape, unless they can originate some kind of a 30-point touchdown play with which to get a tie.

Griff Invades Minor League Meeting to Seek Talent

Clark Griffith, himself, personally, will lead a three-man expedition of the Nats to Baltimore today in quest of talent for his 1950 team, with trade talk rife.

It's the annual winter meeting of all the minor leagues, but Griffith's chief interest will lie in the presence of major league representatives who annually foregather at the minors' sessions.

More than 2000 baseball men will be on the scene of the three-day session, and the 80-year-old owner of the Nats hopes to complete at least one deal or lay the groundwork for it.

Rarely does Griffith attend the minor league sessions, and his presence this time is seen as significant. The final authority on all trades by the Nats, he will have at his side Manager Bucky Harris and Vice President Calvin Griffith.

Despite protestations that he is not interested in trading either Pitcher Ray Scarborough or First Baseman Eddie Robinson, the most widely-sought Nats, Griffith refused the other day to declare flatly they would not be traded.

The Yankees are holding out the lure of Second Baseman George Stirnweiss in a suggested deal for Scarborough, but Griffith would hold out for at least two more Yankee players in any swap involving his top pitcher.

Both the Rankees and the Detroit Tigers are seeking Robinson.

General Manager George Weiss and Manager Casey Stengel of the Rankees were early arrivals in Baltimore, lending credence to the report they are eager to start trade talk.

Rumors of deals also involve the Boston Braves, with Manager Billy Southworth intent on a face-lifting program after the players' "rebellion" of last season.

The Brooklyn Dodgers and St. Louis Cardinals have been talking of a possible deal for a couple of weeks. Branch Rickey has made no secret of his attempt to trade for Cardinal Pitcher Ted Wilks.

Solidly in the trading picture are the St. Louis Browns, who have announced that all of their players over 28 years of age are "available." There will be fancy bidding, it is expected, for Third Baseman Bob Dillinger by Cleveland, and for Second Baseman Gerry Priddy by Detroit.

High on the agenda of the minor league representatives will be the proposed repeal of the "bonus rule" that restricts the manipulation of a newly signed player by any club that has paid him over a certain amount to sign.

Browns Top Bills, 49ers Beat Yanks In Playoffs

Cleveland, Dec. 4 (AP).—Cleveland's Browns moved within a game of their fourth straight All-America Conference championship today as they twice battled from behind to subdue a stubborn Buffalo Bill team, 31 to 21, in a playoff tilt before 17,270 fans.

The Browns, their ball-carrying corps crippled, took to the air for their conquest, first of the campaign over the Buffalo club. The win sends Cleveland into next Sunday's title tilt against the winner of today's coast game between New York and San Francisco.

Otto Graham of Cleveland and George Ratterman of the Bills hooked up in the season's fanciest passing duel, and Graham, former Northwestern All-American and the league's No. 1 aerial artist, had the better of it.

Each threw passes all afternoon, Grandma pitching 43, 2 for touchdowns, with 22 completions for 326 yards, while Ratterman tossed 39, completing 21 for 293 yards and all three Buffalo touchdowns.

The difference was that two of Ratterman's were intercepted, one going back 52 yards for the final touchdown and the other wheeled back 36 yards to the 2-yard line, from where the Browns punched over in a single play.

Jim Still tossed three incomplete passes for the losers, the total of 85 tosses setting a new league record.

Graham's pair of touchdown passes covered exactly 100 yards. The first, a 51-yarder to Dante Lavelli, climaxed a four-play 79-yard touchdown drive in the opening minutes. Later in the period, Lou

'49ers Trim Yanks, 17 to 7

By Russ Newland

San Francisco, Dec. 4 (AP).—San Francisco's 49ers won their way into the final playoff for the All-America Conference championship today when they defeated the New York Yankees, 17-7, before a crowd of 41,393.

The 49ers will meet the defending champion Cleveland Browns for the title in the latter's stadium next Sunday. The Browns eliminated Buffalo today.

The 49ers scored a touchdown in the first period. Halfback Verle Lillywhite broke through right tackle and ran 40 yards to cross the Yankees' goal line but New York tied the count with a 64-yard touchdown march, climaxed by Sherman Howard's 7-yard end run.

'Tennis Is My Racket'

Parker Tabs Riggs for Stardom

(Second of a Series Based on the Book "Tennis Is My Racket")

By BOBBY RIGGS
Former World's Tennis Champion

THE Southern California Tennis Association felt obliged to do something for me because I was, after all, winning all the boys' tournaments.

But the big shots of the association regarded me very lightly. Their attitude was distinctly prophetic.

BOBBY RIGGS

They never liked me personally, and I can't kick too much about that. No one can insist that somebody has to be fond of him. My chief irritation at that time was based on the obvious fact that the association didn't like my tennis game.

"Riggs is too small," they told Mrs. Bartosh. "He doesn't have good strokes, and he doesn't hit the ball hard enough. He isn't tall enough to develop a powerful service, and it doesn't look as though he'll ever be big enough to play a good net game."

"They're crazy," she told me cheerfully. And she worked harder than ever to make something of my game.

WHEN I turned 14, I moved into the 15-and-under division. That's the boys' class. Once you reach that class, you're really getting into organized tennis competion.

I won every tournament in Southern California in that division in my fourteenth year.

Mrs. Bartosh talked the association into paying my expenses to Culver, Ind., for the National Boys' Championship. She went with me and watched me lose in the semi-final to Don Leavens. He was a big fellow who must have been a foot taller than I was.

Another big adventure that year was a trip to Ottawa, Canada, for the Canadian Boys' Championships. Mrs. Bartosh was going there to play in a women's tournament. She took me along and entered me in the boys' event.

There I first met Frankie Parker. Frankie was 16 years old then, and already a prominent junior player. He was sitting under a big shade tree when I walked off the court after finishing a match.

He called to me. "Hey, Riggs!"

I walked over to him, and regarded him with consider-

Cards Win on Christman's Desperation Pass, 31-27

Los Angeles, Dec. 4 (AP).—Scoring a touchdown in the final second of the game, the Chicago Cardinals blasted the Los Angeles Rams' hopes of cinching the Western Division title of the National Football League today with a 31-27 triumph.

The setback, registered as the gun sounded and Pitchin' Paul Christman's pass sailed through the air to End Billy Dewell, left a Sunday throng of 74,673 fans dazed from the abrupt finish.

Trailing at halftime, 17-3 and still two touchdowns behind going into the fourth quarter, the Cardinals roared up front with three scores in as dizzy a finale as has been seen here this season.

Wha' Hoppen!

The outcome thus left the Rams still shy of the Western Division title, but they can still reach the championship playoff with the Philadelphia Eagles by either tying or beating the Washington Redskins here next Sunday.

Chicago	STATISTICS	Los Angeles
14	First downs	19
106	Net yards gained rushing	157

Minutes after the game, fans sat in clustered gloom in immense Memorial Coliseum, wondering what had happened.

All that they could seem to remember was that Christman, stepping back in the gathering fog of early night with the ball on the Ram 24, had sent an arching pass into the end zone.

There Dewell, seeing action for the only time in these fading seconds, waited. A Ram defensive back jumped. He tipped the ball—and it fell into the welcome arms of Dewell.

It was the Rams' Bob Waterfield, however, who started the Cardinals on their belated rush to victory. His third down pass try, with the ball on his own 7, hit the wrong man—and the wrong man, Giant Bill Blackburn, the Cardinal center, stepped off some 13 yards, unmolested as he crossed the goal line.

Christman Comes In

That made it 24-17 for the Rams. Soon Waterfield's second field goal added three points for his club.

But Christman, who had warmed the bench the first half, passed for 50 dazzling yards to Halfback Boris Dimancheff and the Cards edged closer.

The Rams tried to hold on until the clock ran out, but the fired-up Cards, with 34 seconds to go, took over on their own 49. A pass and lateral wound up with Blackburn in possession, who took the ball on the Rams' 36. Christman's pass to Pat Harder took it to the 24.

Then came the clincher to long-armed Dewell.

Smith Goes 51 Yards

His 43-yard field goal netted the first three points. Then he passed to End Bob Shaw on a play good for 71 yards and a score. He engineered the Rams to the 1 and sneaked the ball over for the second Ram touchdown.

Little V. T. Smith, electrified the crowd for the third Ram touchdown with a 51-yard punt return.

Chicago, trailing 17-3 at the half, got its first touchdown in the third period. Christman's 40-yard pass to Mal Kutner set up the scoring opportunity and Charlie Trippi slithered over from the 4-yard line to cap a 66-yard march.

Redskins Win Over Packers Easily, 30-0

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

The best was saved for last, to be witnessed by the least, yesterday as the Washington Redskins closed out their 1949 home schedule with a resounding 30-0 victory.

Only 23,200 fans, smallest gathering since 1942, were in Griffith Stadium seats to see the oft-beaten Redskins relentlessly disassemble the oft-beaten Green Bay Packers without the aid of a single touchdown pass.

It was the first time since 1945 the Redskins had held anybody scoreless. On the other side of the picture, it was only the fourth time in 11 years that the once-potent Packers went pointless.

Redskins	STATISTICS	Packers
17	First downs	10
162	Net yards gained rushing	105
30	Forward passes attempted	28
13	Forward passes completed	7
157	Yards forward passing	122
4	Forward passes intercepted by	0
35	Yards gained, runback intercepts.	9
44	Punting average	34
124	Total yards, all kicks returned	122
55	Yards lost by penalties	50

Despite the convincing triumph, Washington remained in fourth place in National Football League Eastern standings with four wins, six losses and a tie.

Next Sunday, however, the Redskins will help to decide the western championship in a Los Angeles game with the Rams, bringing the regular season to a halt for both teams. As a result of their 31-27 loss to the Chicago Cardinals yesterday, the Rams must beat the Redskins to win the title.

A Ram loss to the Redskins, combined with a Chicago Bear triumph over the Cardinals next Sunday, will throw the title to the Bears.

But it was a soul-satisfying performance in the eyes of the Redskins' new head coach, Herman Ball, who has seen his youngsters lose three straight since he took over.

They simply walked over Coach Curley Lambeau's lads, stopping the Packers' ace ground-gainer, Tony Canadeo, colder than the brisk Washington atmosphere for a mere 29 yards on 15 trips with the ball. They held Packer runners to only 105 yards all afternoon, allowed only seven passes out of 28 to be completed, intercepted four aerials, and braced to keep the opposition out of Redskin territory except on three scattered occasions.

Meanwhile Dick Poillon, backfield jack-of-all-trades, produced most of the Redskin points. Four times he tried for field goals, clicking on three for 29, 21, and 30-yard triple-pointers. His total was upped to 12 points with perfect placements after all three Redskin touchdowns.

Fort Wayne Beats Out Caps In Driving Finish, 72-68

Fort Wayne, Ind., Dec. 4.—Fort Wayne's Pistons beat out the Washton Caps in a driving finish, 72-68, here tonight before 3500 fans.

Trailing by 59-43 at the end of the third period, the Caps staged a furious rally in the last period, outscoring the home club 25 points to 13.

Caps' replacements, John Norlander, Dick O'Keefe and Leo Katkaveck were prominent in this final drive, with Bones McKinney, who had starred earlier in the game, sitting on the bench.

Coach Bob Feerick of Washington announced with seven minutes left to play that he was protesting the game on the basis of the officials' decision on possession of a ball that bounded into the back court.

The Caps led at the end of the first period, 23-13, but the Pistons passed them at the half, 36-34, and grabbed a 59-43 margin at the end of the third period.

The Caps on the strength of some great distance shooting by O'Keefe, Norlander and Katkaveck moved up to within three points with less than a minute to go. But they could not keep possession long enough to make up the difference. They fouled frequently in the closing minutes.

McKinney, Reiser and Scolari paced the Caps in the first half. Scolari and Reiser were high for the Caps with 11 each.

Irish War Vets End Season With 6-0 Win

The Irish War Vets closed out their season with a 6-0 win over the Morningside A. C. yesterday at the Armory field. Don Brussove smacked over from the four for the touchdown. The win gave the Irish a final record of 9-1-1.

Against Catholic, Quantico

Hoyas, G. W. Open Tonight

Three more local basketball teams swing into action tonight, with Georgetown, under its new coach, Buddy O'Grady, meeting Catholic University at Brookland in the season opener for both.

George Washington opening its season under Bill Reinhart, returning to the post he held in prewar days, takes on the Quantico Marines at the Eastern High School gym and Maryland continues its Southern swine playing at Tennessee.

O'Grady, who replaced Elmer Ripley at the Hoya helm, has Tommy O'Keefe, John Brown, John Mazziotta, Dick Alagia, Capt. Dick Falvey and John Norris back from last year's squad but is still sorely lacking in height with Norris, a sophomore, the tallest man on the squad at 6 feet 5½ inches.

Even so, the Cardinals, under Abe Rosenfeld, will rely on speed to contend with their more powerful crosstown rivals from the Hilltop. Joe Losty, leading scorer from last year, will team with freshman Joe DellaRatta at the forward posts. Jim Ballint, 6-3, the Cards' tallest man, will jump center and Herb and Bill Sondericker hold down the guard slots.

Reinhart at George Washington, like O'Grady, will be working almost entirely with last year's material as neither freshman squad produced any outstanding prospects.

Phil McNiff, Johnny Moffatt, Ace Adler, Gene Wilkin, Lenny Small and Art Cerra will be the bix six at George Washington.

Maryland lost its opener to Virginia Tech Saturday night and is an underdog again tonight in Nashville, against the perennially powerful Vols.

At Charlestown

Dear Folks:

This track got a break when John L. Lewis called off the coal strike. Had the miners stayed out, the special race train probably would have been cancelled. During the war Charles Town was first to be affected by gasoline rationing, ban on pleasure driving and the withdrawal of the train. There's an interesting angle to last Saturday's $20,000 race at Bowie. R. E. Carter thought Oriole had such a good chance of winning that he phoned Ted Atkinson, the Nation's No. 1 rider, who was vacationing at Miami Springs, Fla., Ted was raking leaves on his lawn when Carter called him and made a big offer. Atkinson tried to shake off Carter by saying, "I'll come if you double the offer." Carter, without hesitation, said, "It's a deal." Ted caught a train, arrived late in Washington and came to Bowie in a cab, arriving in time to ride Oriole into second money of $4,000 behind Double Brandy. Neither Carter nor Atkinson would disclose the exact amount that went to the rider.—BILL.

Ed Tawney Scores Two Touchdowns

Led by the two-touchdown performance of Eddie Tawney, the Southwest Merchants scored a 13-7 victory over the Riverside Rollers yesterday, in a special playoff for the Metropolitan Amateur Football League's 160-pound Western Division honors.

Immediately following the game, representatives of both teams filed protests with League President Bill Strickler over the weights of players on both squads.

The victory was the second in as many Sundays for the Merchants, giving them the right to meet the Eastern Division Champion Langdon Lions for the 160-pound Metro League crown next Sunday at Gonzaga Field.

Tawney, Southwest's ace back, sent the Merchants into a 6-0 lead in the second quarter when he intercepted a King pass on the Riverside 32 and raced for the touchdown.

Riverside knotted the count in the same period when Osborne fumbled on his own 20-yard line. Dick Jones of Riverside recovered the ball on the 7. On third down, George Holmes tallied and King kicked the point.

Southwest's winning touchdown was scored in the final period. King kicked to the Merchants' 35-yard marker. Then Bob Decker picked up 12 yards on the ground, Tawney's pass to Billy Scaefer was good for 15 more, and Ralph Cantwell carried the ball to the Riverside seven on a double reverse. Tawney plunged over right tackle for the score.

Car Credit Swamps Eagles, 27-0, for Title

Car Credit crushed Anacostia's Eagles, 27-0, yesterday for its third straight Metropolitan Amateur League unlimited championship.

Some 2000 Alexandria Stadium spectators saw the Creditmen, who lost their first game in 45 starts to Fort Belvoir last Sunday, 7-0, play a great game.

The champions gained a second quarter lead when Eddie Green smashed over from Anacostia's 5, and Gil Buckingham placekicked the point.

The Creditment made it 14-0 in the third period when Steve Orsini went over from the Eagles' 1. Buckingham carried over from the 2 for the third score.

George Neumann ended the scoring in the final period when he climaxed a 91-yard drive by circling end from the 12.

Parker Tabs Bobby As a Future Star

able awe.

"Some day," he told me, "you're going to be a good player, kid." I almost blushed.

WHEN I turned 15, I managed to duplicate most of my victories of the previous year in Southern California, and I shoved off for Berkeley full of confidence in my ability to defend my State Boys' Championship. Unfortunately, in the tournament, I didn't have much to go with the confidence. Bobby Harman put the boot to me in the finals.

More trouble popped up after we returned home. The Southern California Association—which, I was beginning to learn then, was not exactly dedicated to the proposition of advancing the career of Robert L. Riggs—refused to give me expenses for a return trip to Culver.

Coming on top of my failure at Berkeley, that gave me the blues for fair. I mooned around the house like a rejected lover. My brother Dave took pity on me. He held a conference with me.

"I've got fifty bucks I'll let you have if it's enough to do you any good," he told me. Fifty bucks would do me a lot of good! With good luck and a favoring breeze, it would get me to Culver. It did.

I got to the finals in Culver all right, but Bobby Harman got there, too, and he still had my number. He licked me in three tough sets.

However, before I left Culver, I won my first national title. Harman and I teamed to win the boys' doubles championship, so the expedition wasn't a total loss. But I can't honestly say I was tickled pink with the results of the trip.

ALL this talk about playing tennis makes it look as though I grew up without an education. Nothing like that happened.

I was attending Franklin High School in Los Angeles—and, naturally, playing on the school tennis team.

When my sixteenth birthday turned up, I moved into the junior ranks. For the first time, I had to face players who were often considerably more mature than I was.

I wanted badly to play in the National Juniors at Culver, but I wasn't too sure the association would send me.

The committeemen never had given me any indication that they were revising their estimate of my ability. However, there were several other players, besides Gene Mako, the No. 1 junior player in California, whom they wanted to send to Culver.

It would have looked bad if they skipped me, the No. 2 player, and sent boys of lower ranking. So I was included on the list to go.

The day I played Gil Hunt in the quarter finals at Culver, he was hard to figure. I wasn't sure if he was having a good day or a bad one. We each won a set, and the score went to 2-2 in the deciding set. Without a word of warning, Gil walked up to the net and growled, "The hell with it. It's too hot. I'm defaulting."

I was shocked. "Gee, Gil," I said, "that won't make these people very happy. This set won't take much longer. Let's play it out."

Big-hearted Riggs. I should have let him go stick his head under a shower like he wanted to.

He finished the match—and he finished me.

I closed out that season—I was sixteen years old—ranked No. 5 among the Nation's juniors. It wasn't a rip-roaring campaign, but it could have been lots worse.

Charles Town Opens Race Meet Today

Fourteen horses, nine winners on mile tracks this year, were named for the Inaugural Purse, featuring today's program at Charles Town. The card is the first of 15 destined to close out Eastern racing for the year on December 21.

The feature, a test of 6½ furlongs for 3-year-olds and up, appears to be a wide open affair, Cacique II sharing top weight of 121 pounds with Lawless Miss.

This pair, best known for their minor track achievements, will have to be at best, however, for opposing them will be Octorora, Arnie, Slammering, Miss Gossip, Olecranon and others who have taken down major oval purses this fall.

The initial program shows class all along the line with a much better than usual brand of horses. The seventh race, over the 4½ furlong sprint c[illegible], has drawn Duke Aumar, War Glance, Maxim Miss, Wingy, Flicka Fool, Flamare, Bungalese and others who were prominent during the Maryland season.

Charles Town was buffeted by opposition both from Maryland's running and trotting horses during the spring and fall. However, the popular oval has opposition no closer than New Orleans and Miami for the current meeting.

Browns Top Bills, 31-21

Groza booted a 24-yard field goal to give the Browns a 10-0 edge.

Action Gets Furious

Most of the drama came in the startling third period. The Bills halted a Brown drive, taking the ball on the 30, but on the second play Capt. Lou Saban of the Browns plucked one of Ratterman's aerials on the 38 and whizzed to the 2-yard line. Edgar Jones, ripped over tackle for the score that gave the Browns a 17-14 lead.

With 1:35 minutes to play, Buffalo was back on top, Ratterman hitting Mutryn with a 30-yard scoring pass to wind up an eight-play advance which covered 80 yards. Buffalo held the lead just 45 seconds, for it took Graham just that long to pitch three passes, one to Mac Speedie for 16 yards, one to Lavelli for 20, and one to Bub Jones for 49, Jones going over for the counter that clinched the verdict.

Cleveland	10	0	14	7	—31

Ike, Dawson Clash Tonight

Philadelphia, Dec. 4 (AP).—Ike Williams risks his lightweight boxing title for the fifth time tomorrow at Convention Hall—and some folks think it may be the slugger's last defense of the crown, win or lose.

The hard-hitting Trenton (N. J.) Negro meets Freddie Dawson, 25-year-old Chicagoan, in a scheduled 15-rounder.

Dawson and Williams have squared off three times, but the 135-pound title never was at stake. Five years ago, before Ike took command of the lightweights, Williams knocked out Dawson in the fourth round.

A year and a half later they battled 10 rounds to a draw. Then after Williams became champion he outpointed Freddie in another 10—but it was so close that Dawson started immediately clammering for a title fight.

The champ is the 2-to-1 favorite for tomorrow's fracas, which will not be televised or broadcast.

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—Tom Lockhart, president of the Eastern Amateur Hockey League, announced today that the Baltimore Clippers had dropped out of the two-division league.

Baltimore's decision to check out followed hard on the heels of the withdrawal of the Cleveland Knights from the league. Teams remaining are New York, Boston, Atlantic City, Toledo, Milwaukee and Grand Rapids.

Gage Races 97 Yards For Pitt

Chicago, Dec. 4 (AP).—The Chicago Bears beat off a last-period Pittsburgh rally—which was fused by rookie Bobby Gage's record-tying 97-yard touchdown run—to whip the Steelers, 30-21, in a National Football League thriller today.

The Bears hoisted their eighth win in 11 league starts by methodically grinding out a 30-7 lead before the Steelers exploded in the finale.

Pittsburgh	STATISTICS	Chicago
14	First downs	19
140	Net yards gained rushing	154
22	Forward passes attempted	30
10	Forward passes completed	13

45.7	Punting average	42.4
80	Total yards, all kicks returned	113
1	Opponent fumbles recovered	2
23	Yards lost by penalties	66

A chilled Wrigley Field crowd of 36,071 was stunned by Pittsburgh's comeback, touched off by the former Clemson Comet's 97-yard sprint.

It was the longest run from scrimmage of the season.

Forty-four seconds later after Gage's sensational scamper, the Steelers scored again. George Papach recovered Ed Cody's fumble on the Bears' 36. Gage tossed 30 to Elbie Nickel, then knifed the last six yards.

Two minutes later Jim Finks stole Johnny Lujack's pass and the Steelers rolled to the Bears' two, only to lose the ball on Papach's bobble.

In the final minutes Pittsburgh recovered a Bear fumble on the Chicago 7, but in four plays was shoved back to midfield.

The Steelers' first touchdown, which tied the score 7-7, came at the outset of the second quarter. Rookie Joe Geri of Georgia pitched a 51-yard payoff pass to Nickel to cap an 86-yard drive in eight plays.

Julie Rykovich, the former Notre Dame and Illinois player who was given his unconditional release by the Chicago Hornets early this season, scored three times for the Bears.

He snared a 19-yard Lujack touchdown toss in the opening 2½ minutes of the game, plunged from the one yard line in the third period and from the one again in the fourth.

George Blanda contributed a 33-yard field goal late in the second period to give Chicago a 17-7 halftime margin.

First Plane Trip

Redskins Really Take to the Air This Time Fly to Los Angeles for Ram Game Sunday

THE FIRST REDSKIN airplane trip in history, a chance to spoil their "originator's" season, and 1950 were all Washington's gridiron professionals could look forward to after yesterday's 30-0 rout of the Green Bay Packers . . . The team enplanes Thursday for Los Angeles where they'll face the Rams of Coach Clark Shaugnessy, who installed the Redskins' T-Formation, in Sunday's crucial western division game . . . The Rams, beaten in an exhibition with the Redskins, must win to assure themselves of a championship playoff with the East's Philadelphia Eagles.

YOU'D think Sammy Baugh's face and 10-gallon hat, after 13 years around town, would be enough of a ticket to gain him admission to any part of Griffith Stadium during a Redskin game . . . They weren't enough yesterday . . . The Slinger, after forgetting his ticket, waited around for 15 minutes before he was allowed in the Redskin dressing room . . . John Adams, the Redskins' 6-foot-7 tackle, was presented with his third daughter yesterday morning . . . During the afternoon father, mother and daughter were doing well . . . Fans who have clamored for "something different" from the Redskins got it yesterday . . . Among other things they saw a Baugh quick kick that went 53 yards, a Statue of Liberty play that lost 17 yards, Tommy Mont catch his own pass when it was blocked, and Fullback Leon Cochran actually roll 4 yards to a first down.

INSTEAD OF TRYING another parachute jump into Griffith Stadium, and missing the field, Santa Claus came to the game at halftime via miniature auto . . . His vehicle was packed with everything, including a lovely brunette . . . Best commentary on the game came later when one fan lamanted: "Green Bay, like Christmas, comes but once a year!"

Lions Shade Bulldogs and Leave Cellar

Detroit, Dec. 4 (AP).—The Detroit Lions emerged from the National Football League cellar for the first time since 1945 by beating the New York Bulldogs, 28-27, today before 14,855 chilled fans.

The Detroiters had to come from behind after blowing a 21-7 halftime lead to the Bulldogs who hold down the cellar berth in the Eastern Division of the NFL.

New York's running attack never got going, as it gained only 53 yards on the ground, but Bobby Layne more than kept his team in the game with his passing. He completed 25 of 40 tosses, three of them for touchdowns. End Ralph Heywood caught 14 of them for 151 yards to tie the league record set by Don Looney of the Philadelphia in 1940 against the Washington Redskins.

New York	STATISTICS	Detroit
20	First downs	17
53	Net yards gained rushing	181
41	Forward passes attempted	23

44	Punting average	40
68	Total yards all kicks returned	212
1	Opponents' fumbles recovered	0
18	Yards lost by penalties	65

The Lions' aerial attack paid off for them, too, today as they got two of their scores on passes thrown by Frank Tripucka.

The game was a see-saw affair, with Detroit taking a first-period lead, as Wally Triplett ran a punt back 62 yards for a score. Bill Dudley's kick, the first of four he made, boosted the Lions' lead to 7-0 at the quarter.

The Bulldogs got their scoring underway in the second period with a 70-yard march that saw Layne complete five passes, including the 9-yard touchdown pass to Bill Chipley.

Detroit came back after the next kickoff and scored after a 33-yard run by Freddy Enke put the ball on New York's 1-yard line. Tripucka cracked over for the score and Detroit went out ahead, 14-7. Three minutes later they made it 21-7 after Chick Maggioli intercepted a pass on the Lion's 35.

New York came to life with a bang in the second half in which it scored three touchdowns, one of them on Joe Golding's 65-yard run with an intercepted pass.

Detroit got back into the game as Don Doll intercepted a Layne pass on New York's 45 and ran it to the 28.

The Lion's ended that scoring drive with an 8-yard pass from Tripucka to Greeen for the touchdown that tied the score at 27-all. Dudley then kicked the point and the Lions had their win.

Rebels Win Loop Title

Richmond, Va., Dec. 4 (AP).—The Richmond Rebels, with Quarterback Paul Richards throwing three touchdown passes, overpowered the Paterson Panthers here today, 35-14, to win the championship of the American Football League. A crowd of 8600 fans watched the game.

Van Buren Cracks Mark For Rushing

By John F. Chandler

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—The Philadelphia Eagles, who clinched the Eastern Division title in the National Football League last week, mauled the New York Giants today, 24-3, before 25,446 frosted spectators in the Polo Grounds.

The scoring began with a field goal by the Giants and ended with one by the Eagles. In between Philadelphia — playing straight football—racked up three touchdowns, all coming the easy way.

The Eagles never opened up their bag of tricks after taking a 7-3 lead on Frank Reagan's return of a punt 41 yards for a touchdown in the second period.

Actually, they seemed more concerned with making certain their halfback ace, Steve Van Buren, broke his own all-time league ground-gaining record. He wound up the game with a total of 53 yards in 17 trips with the ball to boost his total for the year to 1050 yards. In 1947, the former Louisiana State star rushed 1008 yards for the Eagles.

Tommy Thompson, Eagle quarterback whose passes to End Jack Ferrante were a constant threat, switched and heaved a long one to the other flanker, Neill Armstrong, for the second touchdown at 2:33 of the third period.

Titone Takes on Art Llanos In Feature at Turner's Tonight

Two featherweights with terrific records tangle in the feature 10-rounder at Turner's Arena, with Brooklyn's Charlie Titone meeting Art Llanos, former Puerto Rican champ.

Titone has only lost twice in two years, while Llanos' loss to Jimmy Cooper here last spring was his only setback in 110 bouts.

Llanos, with only the loss to Cooper on his record, would like aonther shot at the Washingtonian, as would Titone, who split with Cooper in their first two fights and fought a draw on their last outing.

Pat Thomas, a local lightweight with 10 wins in 11 pro starts meets Baltimore's Walter Hudson and Marshall Clayton meets Jimmy Briscoe in five rounds.

REDSKINS—From P. 13

Redskins Run Over Green Bay by 30 to 0

Sammy Baugh on an 8-yard sprint (surprise! surprise!), and on line smashes of six inches or so by Fullback Ed Quirk and John Henry Hollar.

With his three field goals, Poillon tied a league record for that commodity by placement in one game, although the dropkick mark is four. But the Tribe didn't really need any of Poillon's field goals.

Green Bay, in the process of losing its ninth game in 11 starts, was on the Redskin side of the field only in the first period when it ran out of gas on the Redskin four, the third period when it stumbled to Washington's 38, and in the last minute of play when hopeless passes by Wisconsin's Jug Girard carried again to within four yards of a score.

Under the guidance of Rookie Harry Gilmer the Redskins plowed down to the Packer 26 the third time they had possession of the ball. Gilmer, trapped in a passing attempt, zigged 20 yards up to the six before he was brought down heavily.

There the drive stopped, however, and after three Packer plays Dan Sandifer ran Girard's punt 46 yards back to the Packer 21. Gilmer was found to have suffered a mild concussion earlier and he was removed, Baugh taking over to close out his thirteenth year before local fans.

Washington was back to the 29 when Quirk, his damaged ankle finally in shape, handled the ball four straight times and finally plowed over after 26 seconds of the second period.

Two of Poillon's three-pointers were sandwiched between that point and the anual Christmas show at halftime. Baugh urged the Redskins 31 yards before Richard came through from the 29, and the same timeless Texan featured the advance that resulted in Poillon's boot from the 21 on the last play before intermission.

Girard's weak punt to the Packer 37 set up touchdown No. 2. Baugh was passing from behind the 8-yard line when he took only a brief look for receivers and decided to handle the scoring himself. He was untouched as he scampered into the end zone.

A final touchdown and field goal were worked in before a scoreless fourth period. Center Al Demao's interception of a Girard pass, followed by Sandifer's 21-yard sprint to the Packer 26, launched an onslaught that ended with Hollar's dive across the goal.

And finally, after Goode grabbed his second Girard pass, Poillon did his stuff from the 30. In the fourth frame he had a 40-yarder blocked but it was needed about as badly as a twelfth Redskin on the field.

When the Packers eventually wormed their way to the Redskin 4 for the second time, it was Howie Livingston, combined with Herb Siegert as the Redskins' outstanding defensive team, who knocked down Girard's game-ending pitch to Ted Cook in the end zone.

Johnston Preparing Bill to Reclassify Postoffice Salaries

POSTAL EMPLOYES: Chairman Johnston of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee is working up a bill to reclassify the salaries of the half million postal workers. He will introduce it early in January.

The chairman has asked the department for its views on salary reclassification. In fact, he has requested it to send him its recommendations by January 1.

Postmaster General Jesse Donaldson already has announced that he favors a revision of the postal classification act. He's certain to recommend higher salaries for postmasters, supervisors, and other key officials.

GPO: The 5000 wage board employes won't get a new pay boost until the middle of January, if then. Officials of the Government Printing Office will get prior approval of the Joint Congressional Committee on Printing before it okays any salary changes. Committee members won't return here until early next month.

Under the law, no wage change can be made effective before December 19. Employe groups, however, are asking increases up to 12 cents an hour. The best bet is a modest increase of less than 5 cents an hour.

LEAVE: The Administration will issue rules soon on the new law that provides proportionate annual and sick leave for part-time employes.

Part-time employes on "regular" tours of duty—so many hours daily—will get leave and they will be permitted to accumulate it. Intermittent employes, however, won't be given leave unless they work a minimum of 30 days on a full-time basis.

RATINGS: Federal agencies want a voice in fixing efficiency rating systems for their employes.

The Civil Service Commission is under heavy pressure from the major agencies to recommend a rating system which would (1) give the agencies the authority to set up their own rating systems under standards laid down by the commission, and (2) abolish the present system of employe appeals to the commission.

Agency spokesmen have argued before the Federal Personnel Council that a uniform rating system for classified workers is impractical. They have proposed different systems to rate scientists, clerical employes, hourly workers, etc. But they insist that the agencies themselves should have the authority to draft such systems to make them applicable to the different types of workers.

PROMOTION CREDIT? The staff of the House Civil Service Committee is working on a bill to give credit toward in-grade promotions to veterans for the time they served in the armed forces. The Civil Service Commission has been asked for its opinion on how best to handle the proposal. It can be expected to oppose the bill.

A bill to give promotion credit to veterans in the postal service has been approved by the committee. At the time it was taken up, Representative Ed Rees, ranking GOP member, insisted that all Federal workers be included in it. He lost the preliminary skirmish but he's still battling for his point.

The measure would cover those veterans who entered Government after the war. Those who left their jobs and returned to them after military service were given promotion credits.

Misunderstanding Arises On Warrant Service

A misunderstanding has apparently arisen in the minds of some readers over a picture in the November 27 edition of The Washington Post. The picture showed a civil warrant placed by a deputy sheriff in the doorway of a girl resident of Nebraska Hall, Arlington Farms.

Miss Mary Marella, a Nebraska Hall resident, was shown glancing at the warrant on the door. The Washington Post wishes to make it clear that Miss Marella was not the girl on whom the warrant was served. The name of the girl who was thus served has not been published.

4 Teenagers Injured, One Critically, In SE Smashup

Youths' Car Hits Taxi, Knocks Down Wall in Midnight 8th and I Crash

Four teen-age youths were injured, one critically, in a spectacular accident at midnight last night when their car skidded out of control more than 100 feet and crashed head-on into a brick wall at 8th and I sts. se.

Casualty Hospital officials identified the critically hurt victim as Donald Beuchert, 18, of 6110 B st., Capitol Heights, Md. He suffered severe lacerations about the face and neck.

His companions were tentatively identified as Delbert Nicewarner, Thomas Balless and Dewey Evans. Their exact ages and addresses were not immediately available. All were being treated at Casualty Hospital early today.

Reported 60 MPH

The accident occurred, police reported, when the youths' car travelling at about 60 miles an hour, struck the rear of a taxi parked just north of the intersection.

The car tore off the rear fender of the cab, hurtled across a streetcar loading platform and smashed into the brick wall of the Lincoln Market at 901 8th st. se.

There were no tire marks visible and the police believe the car hit the wall at full speed. A ten-foot hole was knocked in the side of the building and two large glass doors were shattered.

The cab driver, Chester Willey, 50, of 918 Pennsylvania ave. se., told police he had just discharged a fare and was starting to pull away when struck. He was uninjured.

Road Walker Loses Arm

A 63-year-old Wilmington, Va., man was in fair condition at Arlington Hospital last night after losing his right arm as a result of injuries suffered when struck by an auto late Saturday.

Park police said the victim, Mark Watson, of 315 West Boulevard dr., Wilmington, was hit on Mount Vernon blvd., a quarter of a mile south of Collingwood, Va.

The driver of the car, Glenn W. Dickinson, 27, of Toronto, Ohio, said he was going south when he saw Watson walking in the middle of the road, walking toward the auto.

Man Struck By Trolley

A 56-year-old man was taken to Emergency Hospital in serious condition with fractured ribs, cuts and bruises after being struck by a northbound streetcar at 11th and M sts. nw. last night.

Police identified him as John Mears, jr., of 1222 11th st. nw. The driver of the streetcar was listed as Bernard O'Mahoney, 27, of 2010 4th st. ne. No charges were made.

Worse Winter Than Last Is Expected

Washington is in for a "changeable" week and—although the Weather Bureau won't bet its last barometer on it—a worse winter than last year.

The immediate forecast is clearing skies today, windy conditions and a high of 50 degrees after an overnight low of 42.

Cooler temperatures will follow tonight. The rest of the week will be an alternation of warm and cool air masses over the Washington area.

Middle West—A toss-up: either milder or more wintry.

There are good reasons behind these predictions issued yesterday by Jerom Namias, chief of the Weather Bureau's extended forecast section.

District Building Lot Ups All-Day Parking 10 Cents

A 10-cent increase in the all-day parking rate will go into effect this morning on the lot behind the District Building at 14th and D sts. nw. The old rate was 75 cents.

Michael C. Myeroff, 1450 Somerset pl. nw., one of the operators of the Great Plaza Parking Service, lease-holders of the lot from Public Buildings Administration, said the rate was raised to limit all-day parkers.

"We want to accommodate more people," he said.

Great Plaza Parking Service pays $13,500 monthly to operate the lot, Myeroff said, $2000 more monthly than was paid by Federal Parking Services, which operated the lot prior to July 15.

The lot, according to Myeroff, has a capacity of 1135 cars. Transient parking rates will remain at 35 cents for the first hour, 15 cents for the second and 10 for each additional, he said.

Young Pupils Learn French Playing Game

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

First grade students at the Truesdell Elementary School are more apt to say "bonjour" than "good morning" when they greet their teacher at the beginning of the day.

The youngsters are playing what they think is a fine game. Actually they are learning to speak French.

Once a week student teachers from Wilson Teachers College visit selected grades at Truesdell and teach the children French songs and simple expressions.

They Know The Answer

"Comment allez-vous, es enfants?" Miss Phyllis Fishbein, a 20-year-old junior, asked a first grade class.

The youngsters responded: "Tres bien, et vous?"

In the first grade the children act out plays of opening and shutting the door, entering and leaving a room, or pretending to sit down at a table for a meal.

Worked into their vocabulary are the common words of conversation, idioms and a few irregular verbs.

Still too young to be self-conscious, the children enjoy the strange sounds of French words, the inflections and the rhythms.

They swing their arms in unison as they chant the story of a pony that on a trip to Paris first walks, then trots and then breaks into a gallop.

Tell Time In French

By the third grade students at Truesdell can count to a hundred. They tell time in French and can speak in simple short sentences.

They have mastered some of the difficulties of such expressions as "J'ai froid," literally translated "I have cold" for "I am cold."

While the student teachers from Wilson visit the classrooms only once a week the children are drilled in the language for a few minutes every day by the regular teachers, who speak French.

Classes at Truesdell form the laboratory workshop for students at Wilson Teachers. At the college the District's future teachers get their first experience dealing with children.

Students teaching French will be assigned to junior high schools after graduation. At Truesdell they acquire groundwork and confidence by teaching small children.

Mrs. Catharine A. Gardiner, chairman of the division of foreign languages, supervises each class the students teach.

Housing Program Talks Due Before Architects Group

Raymond M. Foley, administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, and Nathaniel Keith, director of the agency's Slum Clearance and Urban Redevelopment, will speak on the new housing program at a dinner of architects and planners at 6:30 p. m. today in the Dodge Hotel.

The speakers will later be joined in a panel discussion by Warren Vinton, assistant commissioner of the Public Housing Administration, and Warren Lockwood, assistant commissioner of the Federal Housing Administration.

The meeting is sponsored by Washington chapters of the American Institute of Planners, American Institute of Architects, Landscape Architects Club, American Society of Landscape Architects, and American Planning and Civic Association.

Auto Trade Meeting

Space in the annual auto show in February will be selected at a dinner meeting of the Washington Automotive Trade Association tonight at the Hotel Carlton. The meeting, at 8 p. m., will be preceded by cocktails at 6 p. m. and dinner at 7 p. m.

Luchs to Make Chest Report To Directors

A special meeting of the Community Chest Federation board and two report meetings will mark the area drive for funds this week.

The sixth week of the campaign opens with 82.67 percent of the $3,991,719 goal attained.

The meeting of directors of the Washington and five Maryland and Virginia units was called by Chauncey G. Parker, federation president, to hear a report from Frank J. Luchs, chairman. It will be held Friday, 4 p. m., at the American Security & Trust Co.

To Hear Latest Results

The week's first report meeting, 12:20 p. m. Tuesday, at the Washington Hotel, will receive the latest results from Business I and II units, and Chest campaigners in Alexandria, Arlington and Fairfax Counties, Va.; Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties, Md.

On Thursday at the same hour and place reports from all units will be made.

Today the Christmas Bureau, sponsored by United Community Services, the Washington unit, begins its first full week of operation at 1101 M st. nw.

The bureau acts as a "clearing house" of toys and other Christmas gifts, as well as invitations, for needy children.

Christmas Parties

Government, business and civic groups, churches and individuals who wish to give Christmas parties for homeless children, share Christmas with an orphaned youngster, or provide gifts or money where they will do the most good, may contact the bureau.

Toys are already coming in from Bill Herson's WRC Doll House at 11th and G sts. nw. and from Jerry Strong of WINX, who is collecting gifts at 7th and F sts. nw. A Salvation Army truck is also bringing food gifts from Jimmy Gibbons' WMAL Country Store on G st. between 13th and 14th sts. nw.

Mrs. Eva Berkenbilt, director of the Christmas Bureau, said yesterday gifts for the teen-age group are particularly welcome.

Jail Breakers Get Cold Feet, Return to Cell

Prince Frederick, Md., Dec. 4 (Spl.).—Two prisoners, one held on a murder charge, broke out of the Calvert County jail here and then crawled back through the hole into their cells early today.

Jailer Cleveland Young said that when they were found in the cells from which they had escaped earlier, the two men said they "went out for a snack of food" and returned "because it was too cold."

Young said, however, he believes they went out for liquor, because both had whisky, inside themselves and in bottles, when they were found back in the cells.

One was Thomas R. Johnson, 22, held in the slaying of George White, and the other was Elbert Cherry, accused of larceny and parole violation.

Young said no full-time jailer is kept in the three-cell lockup. He said he left about 8 p. m. Saturday after feeding Johnson, Cherry and five other prisoners. He said Johnson and Cherry were in the two individual cells, and the five others in an eight-bunk cell.

Cherry, he said, crawled through a 10-by-15-inch feeding door of his own cell, and through a similar door into Johnson's cell. Then, Young said, the two broke a hole through the outside brick wall, and left.

A State trooper brought in a drunk-driving defendant about 9 p. m., Young said, and it was then discovered that Johnson and Cherry were missing.

Roadblocks were put up, and State and local officers organized a manhunt. When it was unsuccessful up to 3 a. m., Young said, the officers returned to the jail for consultation. To their amazement, they found the prisoners back.

Young said Johnson and Cherry were moved today to an undisclosed jail where they will not be able to escape. The other prisoners, he said, are still held in the Calvert County jail. Young and Cherry are due in court December 12.

Plan to Move G-Girl Home News to PBA

Insistence of the Sesquicentennial Commission that Langston Residence Hall be moved from the Freedom Fair Grounds at Anacostia Park came as a "complete sprprise" to its manager, the Public Buildings Administration, it was learned yesterday.

A PBA spokesman said the Federal agency informally consulted the Sesqui staff several weeks ago on the location issue and "was given to believe" that the dormitory housing 175 Negro Government girls would not "interfere" with the Sesquicentennial land use plans.

The fate of Langston and 61 mobile units all at Oklahoma ave. near Benning rd. ne., will be explored at a meeting this afternoon, called by Sesqui Director Edward L. Boykin at commission headquarters, 1400 Pennsylvania ave. nw.

PBA believes the dormitory will continue in operation, either at its present site or elsewhere, since Congress last spring yielded to powerful Government-girl pressure and passed a resolution indorsing continued use of Langston and Arlington Farms at least until 1951.

The future of the 61 mobile units poses a more serious dilemma since many are in such condition that some officials doubt if the homes could be moved.

And John Ihlder, whose National Capital Housing Authority manages the temporary structures, has no other available low-cost housing into which to move the approximately 200 persons occupying the trailer-type homes.

There is just one answer as far as Ihlder is concerned: a more adequate supply of low-rent dwellings.

Library Publishes Defense, China Studies

Two new studies by the Library of Congress' Legislative Reference Service, "Planning National Defense, 1950 to 1970," and "The China White Paper," have just been published.

"China White Paper" gives the background and a partial summary of the State Department's publication No. 3573, "United States Relations With China." The other publication presents factual problems involved in national defense.

The two multilithed publications are on sale by the library's card division.

Hearing Today

Police Seize Three in Dope Raid Here

Three persons will appear today before U. S. Commissioner C. S. Lawrence on narcotic law violation charges following their arrest by police in a raid here Saturday.

The three are Mrs. Juanita Varn, 37, in whose rented room at 921 G pl. nw., the arrests were made; John Wilson Limerick, and Charles F. Alexander, alias "Blow Top Charlie," of 874 Yuma st. se. Police said Limerick gave them the address of a relative, where he actually does not live.

Officers said Mrs. Varn went to a physician in Alexandria and showed him a bus ticket for Lexington, Ky., where a Federal institution for treatment of narcotic addicts is located. She pleaded with him and obtained a prescription, officers said, for an "emergency" dose of a narcotic to tide her over until she could reach Lexington.

Later, the officers said, she gave the prescription to Limerick, who tried to get the narcotic, but failed after an argument with a druggist about the price. Police obtained a warrant for him.

In the meantime, the officers said that Mrs. Varn cashed the prescription at another drug store. Both of them were charged with forging the prescription and uttering a forged prescription.

When the officers walked into Mrs. Varn's room, they said, Alexander tried to dispose of three capsules of heroin. So they arrested him and charged him with illegal possession and with receiving and concealing narcotics.

Two other persons found in the room were arrested for investigation, but were subsequently released.

Window-Shopper Loses Her $500 Savings and Four Rings to Youth

One purse snatcher knocked the crutches from the arms of a crippled woman to take her pocketbook containing 60 cents.

Miss Helen Donahue, 56, a Government Accounting Office employe, told Ninth Precinct officers a youth of about 20 sneaked up on her "like a cat," nearly knocked her to the ground, grabbed her purse and fled in a new convertible.

She said she was crippled from a fall last February and had been out of the hospital only a month. She was within two blocks of her home at 201 2d st. ne., when attacked. One of her crutches was torn from her grasp, she said, but she stayed on her feet.

The purse also contained her keys, glasses and papers.

Privies in D. C. Held Big Health Hazard

Dr. Leonard A. Scheele, Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, said yesterday Washington is one of the few cities in which backyard privies and outdoor water hydrants are a major health hazard.

He cited a 1946 study which indicated that "these 25,000 yard water closets and hydrants, affecting upwards of 100,000 people," are the greatest single environmental hazard to health in the District.

Dr. Scheele was interviewed by Gilbert Hahn, jr., and Carl L. Shipley, Washington attorneys, on the "Viewpoint" program over WQQW.

Aside from these plumbing conditions, Dr. Scheele said, slum areas in Washington are no worse than in comparable cities in the country.

The surgeon general defined slums as those areas in which at least 50 percent of the dwelling units have at least one basic deficiency.

Basic deficiencies, he explained, would include serious deterioration, overcrowding (more than 1.5 persons per room), insufficient area (less than 40 square feet of sleeping area per person), disapproved water supply or sewage disposal no inside water supply, no outside window in rooms, no installed bath.

'Newsboy,' 84, Has Golden Anniversary

Angelo Rockelli

Mrs. Rachel Rockelli

An 84-year-old native Washingtonian, who has sold newspapers here for more than 70 years, and his 69-year-old wife celebrated their golden anniversary over the weekend.

The couple, Mr. and Mrs. Angelo (Bandy) Rockelli of 717 3d st. ne., who were married December 3, 1899, held open house yesterday.

Rockelli set up in business in the old B. & O. station. When Union Station was built, he moved there. That, he recalls, was October 27, 1907.

He has had the stand, outside the station, ever since. Despite a two-year illness, he still manages to oversee it several times a week.

Rockelli can also recall some of his customers, and the list sounds like a biographical history of Washington. Presidents Harding and Coolidge and Supreme Court Justices Hughes and Frankfurter were his most important ones, Rockelli says.

The couple has two sons, a daughter and seven grandchildren. A third son died several years ago.

Rally Closes Latter Day Conference

More than 500 young people last night attended a rally marking the conclusion of the two-day quarterly conference of the Washington Stake of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

At the meeting, the election of Mrs. Ottis Peterson of 2522 24th st. N., Arlington, Va., as new president of the Young Women's Mutual Improvement Association of the stake was announced. A stake in the Mormon Church is comparable to a diocese.

Earlier, Elbert E. Bowen, of the Council of the Twelve Apostles, the presiding authorities of the L.D.S. Church, spoke at the conference.

He pointed out the Western Hemisphere leads in and practices the tenets of Christianity as preached by Jesus. Much western world progress, he said, can be attributed to its adherence to Christian principles.

He warned against those who use the term "tolerance." While each individual must lead his own life, he said, none can be tolerant of sin. The church official pointed out that the cardinal sins, according to Mormon teaching, are murder and immorality.

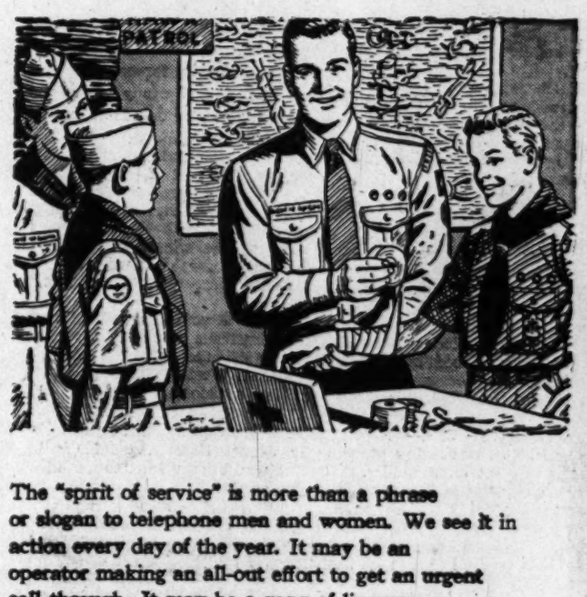
He has the spirit of service on the job

...and off the job



The "spirit of service" is more than a phrase or slogan to telephone men and women. We see it in action every day of the year. It may be an operator making an all-out effort to get an urgent call through. It may be a gang of linemen working all night to rebuild a damaged cable line.

You also see it in the interest telephone people take in their home town. They may be active in your church or service club. They help in Scout work, in school associations and welfare campaigns.

In short, our folks with the spirit of service are interested not only in better telephone service, but also in helping to make your town a better place to live.

War Monument . . . .

A WAR MONUMENT is not always a lavish pile of marble. Webster defines a monument as something "worth enduring." These small Italian boys, and many others like them, are living memorials to the war so recently ended—a war which maimed them and made them orphans. Rescued from the ruins of Italian towns, the children now live in a Boys Town outside Rome, where they are learning to support themselves by handicrafts. Some of their work, made with amazing skill, will be on sale at the Christmas Bazaar to be held at the Italian Embassy tomorrow, from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. Proceeds of the bazaar will go right back to the support of the war orphanage. A great variety of adult craftsmanship will also be on sale, including fine leather, glass, jewelry and other items for which Italy is famous. Many of the things to be sold were imported for the occasion—donated by Italians and friends of Italy both here and abroad. Tea will be served during the afternoon

HELEN HAYES
. . . heads polio workers

Helen Hayes Leads Women Polio Workers

Actress Helen Hayes has accepted appointment as National Chairman of Women's Activities of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, Foundation President Basil O'Connor announced today.

Miss Hayes' daughter, talented young actress' Mary MacArthur, died of polio in September. Miss Hayes, who had previously been active in the Foundation's work, made her first public appearance since her daughter's death at a conference of State advisors for the Foundation, held here on November 9.

As chairman of women's activities, Miss Hayes will direct the work of women volunteers throughout the year, and particularly during the drive in January to raise funds.

In the announcement of Miss Hayes' appointment, Basil O'Connor, president of the Foundation, pointed out that the March of Dimes funds have been virtually exhausted by payments this year for medical care for patients whose families could not assume the costs. More than 41,000 children and adults were polio cases during the 1949 record outbreak, O'Connor said.

It was while Miss Hayes was appearing at Olney, Md. in "Good Housekeeping," that her 19-year-old daughter, ill in New York with what appeared to be a virus infection, suddenly took a turn for the worse and became paralyzed. Miss MacArthur had been touring in the play with her mother prior to that, and earlier in the summer had appeared in several plays at the Olney Theater.

Ask Anne How to Sell Original Paintings

Could you please give me a list of places where I could try to sell oil and also watercolor landscapes that I have been painting at home? I am a newcomer to this area and would appreciate your help very much.
C. K. K.

The Shut-In Craft Service is a recently opened shop which is established exclusively for selling home-produced crafts. They will accept on consignment basis oil and watercolor paintings as well as crochet work, hand-woven products, infants' wear, cocktail aprons, leather articles and metal articles.

The shop is operated on a non-profit basis by Mrs. Neyna Darcy, wife of the leader of the United States Army Band, at 910 23rd st. nw. In addition to offering an outlet for home crafts, the shop is an excellent place to select unusual Christmas gifts.

D. M. B. and W. P. S. of Arlington, B. H., J. F., and A. W. T. of Washington, J. P. of Hyattsville, and F. W. F. of Alexandria have all sent patterns and suggestions for making frog bean bags for G. A. W. The letters have been forwarded. I wish to thank each of you for taking time out of your busy days to help someone unknown to you. Working with folks like you makes this job of mine very pleasant!

In your column some months ago you gave information obtained from the Library of Congress on a short cut procedure for the protection of an idea to be patented for the nominal fee of two dollars. Is there any way you can repeat this for me? I believe it could have been published in November or December of last year. S. G. M.

In September, 1949, we printed some suggestions for obtaining a copyright. The copyright fee is $4. An idea which is predominantly written matter may be submitted to the Copyright Division at the Library of Congress for copyright. The idea should be submitted in printed form to the copyright office so that the notification of the register can be affixed to the printed form.

If the idea consists primarily of a drawing or picture, you may submit an unpublished copy to register it for copyright. On the other hand, if your idea in an invention it must be patented to be protected. To do this, I suggest you visit a patent attorney who will be able to tell you if the idea is patentable, and what steps you should take to obtain a patent. He will be able to give you an idea as to cost, too.

Attention V. E.: This may help the lady who inquired about linens and blankets for twin beds pushed together. We have them (Harvard frames) hinged at outside head corners. I use single bed sheets (or double) for bottom sheets, made up separately. I use one top sheet, a double with a strip sewn on one or both sides (from an old sheet). I bought an extra large wool blanket 80 x 90 which was in stock for $17.95. I put blanket binding on the sides which I use for head and foot. One hobnail spread goes lengthwise across the bed and one other I cut for a pillow cover. I use 3 pillows. Swap fringe from one side to former top of spread, used as side. P. T. H.

Since there seems to be great interest in oversized beds, I am glad to pass on this suggestion.

Could you advise me of the best way to clean a sofa upholstered in dark green velvet?
T. R. K.

Much soil can be removed from pile upholstery fabrics such as velvet by dusting them with one of the cleaning powders which are made especially for cleaning rugs. Shake the powder generously over the surface and rub it well into the pile with the hands. Leave the powder on the furniture for several hours to absorb soil. Remove the powder and the soil with the brush attachment of your vacuum sweeper. If all of the soil is not removed by the first treatment, repeat.

If this treatment does not remove all the soil, I would suggest you turn the cleaning over to a professional upholstery cleaner.

Please tell me where I may get a book listed as "Shoemaker's Best Selections." I had the book or books but in moving they disappeared. D. E. B.

If you would care to give us some further information on this book we may be able to trace it. What subject does the book deal with and when, approximately, was it published?

I would appreciate directions for making finger paints. I know it has been printed in your column before. It is for use by a Brownie Scout troop. R. A.

These directions originally appeared last year in Dr. Ernest G. Osborne's "Family Scrapbook" in The Washington Post.

"Take 1-3 cup glossy laundry starch, 2 cups boiling water, and ½ cup soap flakes. Dissolve starch in small amount of cold water to make paste. Add boiling water and cook until it becomes clear. Stir constantly. Remove from fire, add soap flakes, and stir until dissolved. Put part of mixture into each of several jars that can be tightly closed. Add vegetable or calcimine coloring so that there are several colors from which to select."

We wish to thank E. L. O'N., R. W. R., C. A. F. of Washington and J.C.E. of Arlington who have sent in letters which have been forwarded to the readers requesting the information.

Presents for the Home Suit the Homemaker

By Lucia Brown

WOULD you rather have something for your house or just for you as a Christmas gift?

That's a hard one for any homemaker to answer! Much as mother loves to get personal knick-knacks occasionally, gifts that make housekeeping easier or more fun have an irresistible attraction for her.

A WASHINGTON TRAY now being featured by a local store, for instance. The picture on it is a Currier & Ives print of the White House as it appeared after a deep fall of snow in 1877. Even if your mother lives in another city, she'll enjoy it as a memento of your present hometown.

PRETTY CLOCKS to make time around the house are a grand gift. A fascinating one we saw at an exhibit of Phinney-Walker and Semca clocks the other day serves as a table cigarette lighter, too. Finished in brushed silver or gilt, it has an inset clock with luminous hands and figures, topped by the lighter.

BAKING DISHES that are beautiful are the pottery ones hand-made by Edith and Brian Heath out in California. These casseroles come in a nice variety of sizes, ranging all the way from a big one that will serve six to eight down to an individual dish. They come in eight different color glazes, too. Though they are of such fine modern design that they've been exhibited in museums, they are entirely ovenproof and very practical.

A SPACE-SAVER that will be appreciated by almost any woman is described as a "bag-o-shelves." It looks just like a plastic garment bag, but inside there's the neatest little set of shelves you ever saw, traveling all the way down the length of the bag. It gives you five extra shelves in your closet for storing hats, purses, and incidentals, all out of sight and the dust.

A SMALLER REMEMBRANCE for a friend is a set of plastic clothespins that can be hooked over the shower bar or towel rack. It makes that bit of bathroom laundry—stockings, lingerie, and such—a much neater business. They come six to a box.

THE WASHINGTON TOUCH is seen in a "mid-century" calendar featuring paintings of the Washington Monument, a court of the National Gallery, and other local scenes. They're all by Miss Rhoda Low, who is living here this winter. Besides, there are recipes for each month collected by Miss Low from all over the world—recipes for such enticing dishes as Newport broiled lobster, New Orleans Daube, and Gespacho, a Spanish soup.

Brass and Briefcases Mix at Party Honoring Clarks

By Marie McNair

Through the misty raindrops yesterday, The Lindens, home of Mr. and Mrs. George Maurice Morris, stood out like a Christmas card greeting.

Lights blazed from all windows of the pre-Revolutionary house, hemmed in by a white picket fence, which the Morrises transplanted from Danvers, Mass., to Kalorama rd. in Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris were entertaining for Justice and Mrs. Tom Clark, the four standing to greet guests in the drawing room lighted by artfully-designed electric candles. Mrs. Clark's filmy lace gown, made with a wide neckline and long full skirt, was of a blue shade that could be taken for black. Mrs. Morris did wear black—a velvet gown with high-standing collar at the back and a flowing panel lined with emerald green silk.

There was opportunity—for those seeing The Lindens for the first time—to admire the scenic wallpaper in the hallway; the random width floorboards throughout the house, and the graceful stairway which led to the upper floors.

Guests were invited to take the secret stairway—a steep, narrow twisting flight—downstairs where buffet tables had been set up and a bar serving "grog"—a potent, steaming brew of spiced punch.

Tasty Canapes Bait Appetites

There were turkeys and hams, a delicious tidbit of rolled toast filled with mushroom paste, and a dozen hot and cold canapes besides.

I saw Mrs. Conger Pratt's blue feather hat above her smiling face, as she poured at one end of the table, and Mrs. James L. Houghteling in a gay red hat at the other. Mrs. Wade Haislip took her turn and others pouring tea and coffee were Mrs. J. William Fulbright, Mrs. Clark Clifford and Mrs. Harold Burton. Mrs. Burton, who has won fame for her hats, wore a black lace one this time which fell like a spray over her silver hair. Miss Carolyn Nash did her stint early and Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Mrs. Hunt Young and the Morrises daughter, Mrs. Kenneth Todd Young, jr., all took a turn.

Senora de Dillon, wife of the Ecuador Ambassador, and Senora de la Colina, wife of the Mexican Ambassador, discussed painting—more particularly the portrait that Polly Guggenheim is doing or Senora de Dillon—while the two Ambassadors got together with "the men." Tall, slim Senora de Berckemeyer, wife of the Peruvian Ambassador, was handsome in a tunic suit of black taffeta covered with velvet squares, and a pair of black paradise plumes on her hat.

Top Brass Is on Hand

Gen. Omar Bradley, Chief of the Joint Staffs, and Mrs. Bradley came in just as Mrs. Clifton Cates, wife of the Commandant of the Marine Corps, was leaving. The Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Brannan left for another party but stopped long enough to tell me about the success of the Democratic dinner at the Waldorf last Friday night, with 3400 guests paying $100 a plate.

George Williams and Rosa Ponselle (who spends more time here than she does at her home in Baltimore) came together, and I saw the Howard Mitchells, the Iran Ambassador, Hussein Ala, the Luxembourg Minister, Hugues LeGallais and Gen. and Mrs. Gordon Young. Miss Carolina Nabuco, the Brazilian Ambassador's sister, was wearing a white bird on her hat and a mink coat over her dark frock.

It was good to see Mrs. Paul Daniels whom I've happened to miss about town these days, and Mrs. Marcella duPont who's soon to take off for Hawaii.

Chatted with the Barnet Novers and Fred Roy; saw Mrs. Buchanan Merryman and Mrs. James Helm and here and there were Breckinridge Long, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja, Mrs. English Gordon, Col. David Barry, Mrs. Davies Fitch, Col. and Mrs. William S. Culbertson and Mr. and Mrs. William MacCracken.

Party for Mrs. Treglown

The Ecuador Ambassador and Senora de Dillon and the Mexican Ambassador and Senora de la Colina, came on from The Lindens, to Wardman Park for Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Gallagher's cocktail party, a farewell to Mrs. Edward Treglown, leaving soon for Nassau.

Like most of her parties—and they're always a success—Phyllis Gallagher got this one up in a couple of days, had practically nobody turn her down, with the result there were 100 or more friends of Ruth Treglown there to bid her au revoir.

Fourth Estate Goes to a Party

As a prelude to the Gridiron Club's festivities next weekend, Mr. and Mrs. Duke Shoop entertained for the club's outgoing president, Richard Wilson, and Mrs. Wilson, at cocktails yesterday afternoon. Strictly a Fourth Estate party, other guests were a group of Gridiron Club members and their wives.

Also on the calendar yesterday was the reception by the Finnish Minister and Mme. Jutila to celebrate Finland's Independence Day, with members of the Finnish colony in and about Washington as their guests. Another event of Sunday was Mrs. Katharine Byron's supper party for pretty Barbara Slingluff and Comdr. Jesse Gay whose marriage takes place on Thursday, with members of the wedding party as the only other guests.

Honored at Luncheon

At the honor table today in the Mayflower Lounge will be Mme. Valdimir Rybar, Mrs. Floyd Akers, Mrs. Tomas Cajigas and her house guest Mrs. Charles J. Barone of Detroit. Others at the table will include Mrs. Marguerite Glover of New York, Mrs. Jean Frear, Mrs. David Olson and Miss Ruth Crane.

Laced Shoes Support Baby

Laced shoes are much better for the baby who is learning to walk than those with straps, for the valuable ankle support they give.

Jobé Says...

Fur a Wonderful Christmas Present

I don't know how many men read these fashion columns—but I'm sure you smart women readers will find some way of telling them what I say today. It's this—that a fur stole or cape or any other small furs are wonderful Christmas presents for any women. Earlier this fall I told you how smart this fashion is. At the rate women have adopted it, a fur stole will seem like an absolute necessity by spring.

For Stuffiness, Coughs of Colds

You know—like millions of others—how wonderfully effective Vicks VapoRub is when you rub it on.

Now...here's amazing, special relief when there's much coughing or stuffiness, that "choked-up" feeling. It's VapoRub in Steam ...and it brings relief almost instantly!

Put 1 or 2 spoonfuls of VapoRub in a vaporizer or bowl of boiling water. Then—breathe in the soothing, medicated vapors. Every breath eases coughing spasms, makes breathing easier. And to prolong relief—rub VapoRub on throat, chest and back.

Today's Column Is For "The Other Guy"

Ordinarily, I try to write a column especially for you. The bad puns, the Give-Aways, the jokes and even the cartoon are designed to make your second cup of coffee a bit more pleasant.

But this morning there's no cartoon, no jokes — in fact, no column. Because this isn't directed at my readers. It's meant for "the other guy."

This "other guy" is not a very lovable character. Unless you keep after him every minute of the day, he has a tendency to backslide.

I'll explain. Friday morning, my phone rang. The woman at the other end began by saying:

"Thank goodness you were in. I've just put my last nickel in this pay phone to call you."

My reaction to that was the same as yours probably would have been. "Here comes one more melodramatic hard luck story."

But now that I've spent a day tracking the story down, I don't feel quite so blase. Maybe you won't either when you hear it.

The beginning is familiar enough. She's a heart case, and the doctor says a job would kill her. Her father is an invalid; so is her mother. So the family has been on public assistance.

Very routine, so far. What business is this of mine? Or yours, for that matter?

Well, it seems that the public assistance checks were a little late in going out this month. These people had budgeted right down to the last day, and when the check didn't arrive, they went to inquire why. The answer was:

"There was a holiday this month, and we're so short-staffed that a work interruption of this kind usually results in a delay in sending out the checks."

It happens several times a year. Sometimes the checks are delayed for weeks.

Well, madam, this shouldn't be too difficult to straighten out. A couple of phone calls and we'll have you all fixed up.

That's what you tell her. But you've still got a few things to learn about "the other guy."

He's the fellow who cut the public assistance appropriation in Congress, and made them get by with reduced funds, and a short staff—the bird who doesn't care if these relisfers go hungry while they wait.

Well, we'll show him. We'll call the Salvation Army. There's a bunch that knows the true meaning of charity.

Sure—we'll call them. And we'll find that they don't have any money, either. They'll take you in, they'll fix you a bowl of soup, they'll let you take along a couple of cans of chili. And no questions ask d.

But they're strapped, too. "The other guy" let 'em down.

Not you and me, of course. We gave to the Community Chest, and it's not our fault that the Chest didn't meet its goal last year. It's that tightwad "the other guy" who didn't give.

Well—no matter. We'll call the Family Service Association. They're good-hearted folks. They'll know what to do.

Sure, they know what to do. And they wish they had the money to do it.

"Every time the public assistance checks are late, you hear hundreds of pitiful stories like this. But what can we do? We just don't have the funds to cover these emergencies."

The church around the corner from these folks? The person who supervises the distribution of charitable funds is out of town. Nothing can be done without him. So sorry.

So sorry you're hungry, madam. Would you like me to tell you some funny stories to keep you alive until your check comes through?

Or would you rather that I do something concrete? Something like a column about "the other guy," whose callous disregard for his fellow men permits such conditions to exist.

Shall I write a stirring piece about giving to the Community Chest? Or about offering up a prayer of thanks to God that we're able to give—instead of begging for food in the Capital of the richest Nation on earth?

No, that won't help you, either, will it? But I'll tell you what will help.

Frank Shore of 8329 Draper lane, Silver Spring, Md., had some tickets to a big football game. At the last minute he found he couldn't go, and I broadcast that fact on my radio program.

Leonard Ballard of 236 Massachusetts ave. ne. bought the tickets, and paid a $10 premium "for your favorite charity." I said the money would go to Children's Hospital.

But it won't. It'll go instead to keep three people alive until "the other guy" wakes up to his responsibility as a human being.

When that day comes, the Salvation Army, the Family Service Association and a hundred other welfare groups will have the money to do the job we expect of them. And they'll do it.

But that day can't come until an aroused, organized community takes common action to put its Community Chest drive over the top.

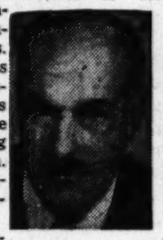
The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Senators View the 'Flamenca'

By Drew Pearson

Here is a contrast between what two groups of Americans have done to influence their country's standing abroad. One is the Junior Chamber of Commerce in Texas. The other is the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee traveling through Spain.



Pearson

First, the antics of the Senators.

The subcommittee, headed by Senator Elmer Thomas of Oklahoma, traveled in a special Air Force plane, including six crew members, two stenographers, three clerks, three wives and a doctor—Dr. William E. Lovelace of Albuquerque—to look after the health of New Mexico's Senator Dennis Chavez.

"They call this a junket," carefully explained Senator Thomas to newsmen, "but that's a misnomer. The country's spending seven billions of the taxpayers' money, and the taxpayer is entitled to know how the money is being spent. That's what we're looking after."

But the Senator glossed over the fact that the U. S. A. is spending not one cent of money in Spain. "One of the Senators had a relative in Spain he wanted us to meet," Thomas explained, presumably referring to Senator Chavez.

Arriving in Madrid at 3:30 p. m. Saturday, the committee was received by Foreign Minister Martin Artajo, then attended a reception at the American Embassy, then drove the next day to Toledo, attended a fiesta, witnessed the training maneuvers of some young bulls for a bull-fight and saw a gypsy "flamenca" dance.

Bibulous Senators

The United States has great prestige in Spain. Americans are considered sober, hard-working people. Therefore, it does not help us as a Nation when some of the individuals in a group of Senators act as if they were on a week-end binge.

Senators Maybank of South Carolina and Robertson of Virginia were abstentious. But in varying degrees, some of their colleagues were not.

As the festivities wore on at Toledo, the Spanish hosts tried hard to get food into their friend Senator Chavez of New Mexico, who kept mumbling:

"I'm a Catholic, a Spaniard and a Yankee gentleman, and I don't give a —— who knows it."

Finally, Senator Thomas, whom the Spanish press referred to as "Cotton" Thomas, corralled most of his committee plus the Spanish hosts around a table as if he were presiding over his Senate Agriculture Committee back in Washington, and tried to hold a hearing. But everybody wanted to talk at once. Finally, the Senator from Oklahoma concluded:

"I move that the foreign minister convey this information to this young man, the Ambassador." He pointed to Charge d'Affaires Paul Culbertson, who is not an ambassador, due to the fact that the U. N., in a very important debate, has voted against ambassadors to Spain. "He," continued Thomas, "will then convey it to the State Department, which always keeps the Senate well informed."

Swedes May Be Right

In other words, if the Senators were going to get their report from the State Department anyway, they might just as well have saved the taxpayers' money and stayed at home.

Finally, one American asked Senator Thye of Minnesota:

"Why did you come here at all? It's obvious that you can't see anything during this brief week-end."

"Well," replied Thye, who at home is a serious, hard-working Senator, "We have a Military Attache here. And we have a Naval Attache here. And we have consulates. And it's our duty to see that they are properly representing the United States."

"But you arrived on a Saturday afternoon when these offices aren't open," remonstrated the American, "and you leave Monday morning before they open."

"You've seen a fiesta, you've had a siesta, and you've danced a flamenca," added an American lady, "but what have you seen of Spain?"

Undaunted, the Senators flew to Paris in their special Air Force plane Monday morning. And out of their vast fund of weeeknd knowledge about Spain, they announced that Dictator Franco should receive an American loan of 100 million dollars.

Note—Maybe the Swedes were wise in not rolling out the red carpet for the Thomas committee.

Texas Diplomats

In contrast, here is what the Junior Chamber of Commerce is doing in Texas:

The Jaycees' program is called "universal understanding," and since they have no Air Force airplane and can't use the taxpayers' money to tour Europe, their plans are not so ambitious as the Senators', though probably more effective.

What they are doing is forming contacts by mail with groups of young men in Europe in order to exchange letters and get better acquainted. The Jaycees of Amarillo, Tex., for instance, are writing to young men in Salzburg, Austria, which is about a two-hour drive from the Iron Curtain.

In Salzburg, Austrian youth at first formed the Austrian-American Youth Bridge in order to learn more about the U. S. A., later wanted to set up a Junior Chamber of Commerce of their own. Next year the Amarillo Jaycees are sending a Texan to Austria so they can all get better acquainted.

This unspectacular, people-to-people friendship by a lot of American groups all over the country is doing more to plant a solid foundation for peace than all the junketing Senators combined. Eventually, and if practiced widely enough, it may build a more solid understanding than the Marshall Plan.
